MATERIALS OF THE WORK.

Materials of the work.

I. The History of public archives, is amongst the most interesting branches of diplomatic archæology: but the investigator is too frequently disappointed by the scantiness of his materials. The sources of information, relating to His Majesty's Treasury of the Exchequer, considered as the great depository of the Crown records, though not complete, are still existing to a greater extent than those of any other similar establishment: and they exhibit with much clearness, the mode and principle whereby this important repository acquired the documents which it now contains.

A considerable number of the muniments noticed in the antient kalendars and inventories published in the three volumes of this work, are yet in this Treasury. And they acquire additional value from the proof thus furnished, of their being at the present day in the custody of the functionary, representing the antient officers, the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, to whom they were originally entrusted. Many documents, however, so enumerated, are no longer contained in this Treasury; some may be in private hands, or deposited in other public repositories. In such cases these kalendars may be, and in one remarkable instance have been, the means of identifying them, and of establishing their authenticity: but other documents, which, from the descriptions preserved in the Kalendars, must have been objects of great curiosity, are, it is to be feared, irrecoverably lost.

In another point of view, these kalendars and inventories possess much interest, derived from the particulars which they disclose respecting the regalia, jewels, and other articles of curiosity or value antiently deposited in the Treasury, and which they describe equally with the records. They afford many subjects highly worthy of consideration, not merely in elucidation of costume and manners, but also as furnishing important data to the statistical enquirer.

BISHOP STAPLETON'S KALENDAR.

Materials of the work.

Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar. Vol. i. p. 1–155. (Note I.)

II. The first of the published inventories is the Kalendar, compiled about the year 1323 under the direction of Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Exeter — the munificent founder of Exeter College — and who then filled the office of Treasurer. The circumstances under which he advised the formation of this catalogue will be stated hereafter. (§ X.) It is methodized with considerable care, and, after the historical preface and tables of contents (§§ i., ii., iii., p. 1—8), it treats of the documents in the Treasury, under the following leading classes or divisions :

§ iv. Bullæ Papales secundum materias, &c.—Papal Bulls, arranged in twenty-six subdivisions or sections, distinguished by twenty-three letters of the alphabet and by arbitrary marks. Vol. i. p. 9–33.

§ v. Anglia. — Deeds and charters relating to property conveyed, surrendered, or granted to the Crown, or to the members of the Royal Family. p. 34–67.

§ vi. Anglia continued. — Grants of lands and tenements, &c. made by, or proceeding from the Crown. p. 68–70.

§ vii. Chartæ, scripta, et munimenta, &c.— p. 71–81.

In the margin of this Kalendar, the various chests, &c. in which the documents were deposited are carefully noted: and drawings are added of the signs by which they were distinguished, according to the practice more fully described hereafter.

MEMORANDA OF THE TREASURY, 19–45 Ed. III.

III. Memoranda of the Treasury, 19 Ed. III. to 45 Ed. III.—This document has no title in the original. It consists of twenty leaves of vellum, unbound, but stitched together as a book or quire, and in which the Chamberlains or their deputies from time to time made or entered their memoranda — evidently contemporaneous — of the muniments as well as of the jewels and other articles deposited in the Treasury or delivered out of the same. The entries are roughly and irregularly made, and often in a species of current hand. Memoranda of the Treasury, 19–45 Ed. III. Vol. i. p. 156–204.

MEMORANDA OF THE TREASURY, ED. III. TO HEN. VIII.

Memoranda of the Treasury, Ed. III. to H. VIII. Vol. i. p. 205–250. Vol. ii. p. 1–240. Vol. iii. p. 1–97.

IV. Liber Memorandorum de tempore Domini Willielmi de Mulsho et Domini Johannis de Newenham, Camerar' Receptæ Domini Regis, videlicet, a festo Paschæ anno regni Regis Edwardi tertii post conquestum trigesimo nono, usque, &c. — The volume thus entitled, is a fair vellum book, composed of 153 leaves, and containing entries of the same description as those in the preceding book of Memoranda (§ III.); and carried on from the 39th Ed. III. to the 35th Hen. VIII., in contemporaneous hands. These entries continue with tolerable regularity until the reign of Hen. VII., when they become much broken. In the reign of Hen. VIII. they are still more scanty and interrupted. The entries of this reign are only of the following years, 3, 5, 7, 8, 10, 11, and 12; after which none occur till the 35th year. Many valuable instruments are inserted at full length in this book, and others are annexed to the leaves and bound up therewith.

Materials of the work.

INVENTORY OF THE REGALIA AND JEWELS OF HEN. VI.

Inventory of the jewels, &c. of H. VI. Vol. ii. p. 241–258.

V. A book very fairly written, composed of 55 leaves of fine vellum, but many of them blank; capitals and rubrics carefully illuminated in gold and colours; containing an inventory of the regalia and Crown jewels of Hen. VI. in the Treasury, and also memoranda of the deposit and removal of various diplomatic instruments, together with various entries relating to the pledging and disposition of the regalia, &c. These later memoranda are omitted in the printed text, inasmuch as they are also found in the "Liber Memorandorum."

INVENTORY OF THE REGALIA AND PLATE OF HEN. VIII.

Inventory of the Regalia and Plate of Hen. VIII. Vol. ii. p. 259–298. (Note II.)

VI. This inventory was formed in the following manner.—By commission under the Privy Signet, dated at Eltham, 2d June, 24 Hen. VIII., Sir Thomas Awdeley, Knight, Keeper of the Great Seal, Sir William Powlett, Knight, Controller of the Household, Sir William Kingston, Sir Brian Tuke, and Sir John Daunce, were appointed to survey, view, and take account of the regalia, crown jewels, and plate, in the custody of Robert Amadas deceased, late Master and Treasurer of the jewels; the same to be delivered to the keeping of the King's right trusty councillor Thomas Cromwell, Esquire.

The accounts taken in pursuance of such commission were entered in three books, "declaring particularly the kinds, qualities, "proprietaries, and poise, called Troy weight, "of all the said jewels and plate." The first of these books was "signed with the hand "of our said Sovereign Lord, and with "the hands of the said Commissioners and "the said Thomas Cromwell, their names "subscribed," and delivered to Elizabeth Amadas, the widow and executrix of Robert Amadas, for her exoneration and discharge in that behalf. The second book was "signed "likewise with the hand of our said Sove-"reign Lord the King, and with the hands of "the said Commissioners and the said Eliza-"beth, their names subscribed," and delivered to Thomas Cromwell "for the just, "true, and certain knowledge of his charge "in that behalf." And the third book was subscribed with the hands and names "of "the Commissioners, Elizabeth Amadas, "and Thomas Cromwell, and with our said "Sovereign Lord for his sufficient know-"ledge, surety, and remembrance remain" ing." The last-mentioned book seems to be the volume now in the Treasury; every page is subscribed by the Commissioners, but the signatures of Elizabeth Amadas and Thomas Cromwell are wanting.

Materials of the work.

Inventory of the Regalia and Plate of Hen. VIII.

From this book, the inventory of the regalia and gold plate of Henry VIII. is extracted. It is an important historical document, as illustrating the splendour of the royal household. The inventory of silver plate is scarcely less remarkable; but it has been omitted, for the insertion thereof would have extended this publication to an inconvenient size.

Vol. ii. p. 259–298.

INVENTORY OF THE JEWELS OF JAMES I.

VII. This is a book containing an account of the regalia and jewels in the King's Secret jewel house in the Tower of London, more antiently called " the Treasury in the " Tower of London," according to a survey taken by the Earl of Dorset, Lord High Treasurer of England, Charles Earl of Nottingham, Lord Admiral of England, Thomas Earl of Suffolk, Lord Chamberlain of the King's Household, Edward Earl of Worcester, Master of the Horse, and George Lord Hume of Berwick, Chamberlain and Under Treasurer of the Exchequer, by virtue of a warrant under the Privy Seal, dated 22nd March, 2 James I. In a second part of this book, is an account of the jewels delivered to the Queen. The sign manual is affixed and prefixed to each of the divisions. The book itself was delivered into the Treasury 10th August 1620.

AGARDE'S COMPENDIUM.

Agarde's Compendium. Vol. ii. p. 311–335.

VIII. A Compendium of the Records in the Treasury, compiled in 1610 by the celebrated Arthur Agarde, as appears by a note prefixed to the same. It is followed by a kalendar (not printed) of the foreign leagues and treaties in the Treasury. The Compendium is very curious, as showing the general arrangement of the records at the period when it was compiled: and the quaint originality of the writer relieves the dryness of his subject.

Materials of the work.

MISCELLANEOUS DOCUMENTS.

Miscellaneous documents, writs, inventories, &c. Vol. i. p. 250–299. Vol. iii. p. 99–455.

IX. Writs under the Great Seal directing the transmission of records into the Treasury, Orders of Council for the same purpose, Indentures made upon the delivery of records, Indentures executed by the Treasurers upon their appointment to the office, specifying the articles entrusted to their charge, Inventories of articles deposited in the Treasury, and other instruments illustrating the history of this repository and its various branches, from 16 Ed. I. to 5 Geo. II., form the remaining portion of this work. The indentures begin in the reign of Edward I. Similar indentures of the reign of Henry III. are noticed in Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar, but these have long since disappeared; and it is evident that only a small proportion of those of the later reigns have been preserved. The table of contents prefixed to the Third volume will show the general nature of these documents. Some information deduced from them will be found in this introduction: but a perusal of the whole will well reward the diligent reader, who may extract from them abundance of valuable information relating to manners and customs. Many very curious and important particulars can be here also collected of the prices of gold and silver plate, jewellery, and other articles of a similar description, at different periods of our history.

X. The custom of depositing records and muniments amongst the treasures of the state, is grounded upon such obvious reasons, that it prevailed almost universally amongst antient nations; nor indeed is it entirely discontinued at the present day. The earliest, and in all respects the most remarkable, testimony concerning this practice is found in the Holy Scriptures: "Now, therefore, if it seem good "to the King, let there be search made "in the King's Treasure-house, which is "there at Babylon, whether it be so, that "a decree was made of Cyrus the King "to build this house of God at Jerusalem." "Then Darius the King made a decree, "and search was made in the House of "the Rolls, where the treasures were laid "up in Babylon."

Treasures were not unfrequently placed in places of worship: the sanctity of the spot might be considered as repelling the spoiler: the Fane itself was often a stronghold, — such, for instance, was the Athenian Acropolis; and in these temple-treasuries, both in the cities of Greece and of Rome, the public muniments were deposited in security.

Treasury of Records. Its history.

The same custom continued in many parts of Europe. The Royal Chapel and Treasury were thus united in France; and the latter, as a permanent repository of records, is supposed to have received its organization in the reign of Philip Augustus, when, as it is said, the muniments which had followed the King's person in the wars, were captured by the English enemy.

In England, the Chapel and the Treasury, separated at an early period, both became the repository of different classes of muniments and records. To the Chapel, the King's Chancery had always been annexed; and the registration or inrolment of the documents, authenticated by the Great Seal, a practice of which there are no traces anterior to the accession of John, produced the rolls or records which constitute the nucleus of that repository. The Treasury contained the records of the Courts of Justice, and whatever more immediately concerned the property and personal engagements of the Sovereign: and we have very distinct evidence, that, anterior to the Conquest, those solemn transactions relating to land, which, concluded before the King, had the effect of ending and determining the rights of the contracting or litigant parties, were deposited in the Treasury in the care of his Bower Thane, Cubicularius, or Chamberlain. And in the legal custody of the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer (now represented by the Keeper appointed by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury) the records in this Treasury remain at the present day.

Into this repository then, as the King's strong box, if such a term may be employed, have the documents which it now contains, been from time to time delivered by competent authority. Sometimes the instruments were brought in by the hands of the King's officers; in other cases transmissions have been made by writ, by rule of court, or by order of Council; of which modes of practice various examples will be found in the text of these volumes, and of which some will be hereafter considered and quoted, in describing the several classes of records now existing in this Treasury.

Considered as a Record Office, the Treasury received a new and more efficient organization from Bishop Stapleton. He states, in the preface or introduction to his Kalendar, that the muniments relating to the rights and dominions of the Crown, as well as others affecting the interests of private persons, had, by the commands of the King for the time being, been removed or transferred from person to person and from place to place,—from the Wardrobe to the Chancery, from the Chancery to the Exchequer, and from thence to the Receipt or Treasury,—and often, by incompetent individuals; and that thereby many inconveniences had arisen both to the Crown and the subject, inasmuch as, for want of proper arrangement and sufficient kalendars and registers, the documents could not be readily found. For these reasons, the King, after mature consideration, but upon the special motion of the Treasurer, had ordered that all the documents and instruments in question should be properly digested and arranged, so that recourse might be had to them readily when required; which plan was accordingly effected, the arrangement being such as is displayed in the now published Kalendar.

DIPLOMATIC INSTRUMENTS.

Diplomatic Instruments.

XI. Amongst the documents so placed in the Treasury, a very prominent station must be assigned to the leagues, treaties, and instruments of every description, arising out of the transactions between the Crown of England and foreign powers. Those still extant — together with many noticed in the antient Kalendar and Memoranda, but now no longer to be found — relate to the Empire, France, Scotland, Spain, Castille, Aragon, Navarre, Portugal, Denmark, Sicily, Brittany, Burgundy, Flanders, Holland, Saxony, Juliers, the Hanse Towns, &c., the United States of the Netherlands, the Switzers League, Venice, Genoa, Florence, Lucca, Milan, &c. The documents thus connected with the diplomatic relations of the Crown, were, according to the antient course of business, deposited in the Treasury, and, as such, regularly transmitted from time to time.

The custom was, without doubt, coeval with the monarchy, though no record showing the mode of transmission is extant earlier than the 31st Ed. I., when, as appears from a memorandum on the Pipe Roll, or rather on the Membrane of Memoranda, Master Robert Pickering, the King's Clerk, one of the Masters of the Chancery, delivered to Sir Philip de Willoughby, Chancellor of the Exchequer, acting for the Treasurer, and to the Chamberlains of the same Exchequer, various diplomatic instruments relating to France and Scotland. Another similar memorandum of the 34th Ed. I. testifies the delivery to the two Chamberlains, of the Great Roll of Scotland. In the 10th Ed. II. very many treaties, protocols, and other documents arising out of the negociations with France, were delivered, pursuant to a writ under the Great Seal, to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer.

Vol. iii. p. 104.

Diplomatic Instruments.

Vol. iii. p. 109, 116.

As far as the Memoranda are extant, these deliveries or transmissions regularly continue; I cannot quote the examples, for they occur in every page; the names of the officers by whom the documents were so brought in being generally mentioned; and not unfrequently a note is added, stating by whose special directions the deposit was made. The last delivery took place in 1624. The series altogether is extremely important. Of the historical value annexed to such documents it is unnecessary to speak, and they are also of great curiosity as specimens of palæography and of art. The golden bull of Leo King of Armenia, as well as the twenty golden bulls of Edmund titular King of Sicily, of which the Treasury could boast when Bishop Stapleton compiled his Kalendar, have long since been abstracted; the golden seal of the Greek Emperor, noticed in the Memoranda of the Treasury, is equally absent, and had certainly disappeared before Agarde compiled his repertory: but the three "Golden Leagues," as he terms them, have escaped spoliation. Of these, the most antient is the charter by which Alfonso the Wise surrenders to Edward I., then the eldest son of Henry III., all his right in Gascony, the seal or bull whereof is impressed in very pure gold. The Castle on the obverse, and the Lion on the reverse, — emblems rather than armorial bearings, — are finished with the graving tool. The charter itself has unfortunately sustained much injury from time, but the beauty of the character can yet be discerned, and it is subscribed by the very singular and elaborate Rueda or Orb, which, according to the practice of the Castilian Chancery, contains the name and style of the Sovereign, supported, as it were, on either side by the vassals, Moorish and Christian, who owed allegiance to his throne.

The second, is the treaty of perpetual peace concluded, 18 August 1527, between Francis I. and Henry VIII., to which is appended a golden seal of exquisite workmanship, in the style of Benvenuto Cellini. On the obverse, is the monarch seated upon his throne, the reverse bears the shield of France encircled by the collar of the order of St. Michael. Partly chased, and partly composed of fillagree, it is as fresh as when it came from the hands of the artist. The ground is grained, and the under-cutting and fillagree are so deep, and yet so delicate, as to render it impracticable to allow any cast to be taken from it, since such an operation could not be performed without certain injury to the engraving.

The third, is the papal privilege, dated 5 March 1524, by which Clement VII. confirms the title of Defender of the Faith to Henry VIII., and to which is appended the golden bull. This is struck as a medal, like the ordinary leaden bulls, but with a die wholly differing from that which is usually employed; for the type of the ordinary bull is according to the pattern of the middle ages, whilst the golden bull exhibits the perfection of Italian art.

museum, exhibiting specimens of the various characters employed in Europe from the 13th to the 17th century; but I regret to add that a large proportion of the documents are in exceedingly bad condition. They appear to have sustained much damage from damp when deposited in the "Old "Treasury," in the cloisters, (of which more hereafter,) and have afterwards suffered other injuries, so that many exist only in crumbling fragments, which no present care can preserve or retrieve.

The transmission of the Treaties to the Treasury, their proper and legal place of custody, and where, according to antient precedent, they ought to rest, has been interrupted by the erection of the State Paper Office. A Patent issued by James I. recites the "endeavours of Robert Earl "of Salisbury, our Principal Secretary, "and our High Treasurer of England, to "reduce all such papers, as well those "that heretofore remained in the custody "of Sir Thomas Lake Knight, being "the papers of some of the Principal "Secretaries of our predecessors, Kings "and Queens of England, as also such "other papers as he shall think fit to de-"part with, being either such as he hath "collected of his own times, or such as

Under this Patent the State Paper Office, in whatever manner it may previously have existed, seems to have received its permanent establishment: but (so far as can be collected from the Patent) without any intention that it should retain the instruments relating to the diplomacy of the Crown; and which, according to the constitution of the office, ought to have been regularly removed into this Treasury. Without ascending into earlier periods, the proofs of this position, namely, that the antient Treasury was, of right, the proper and legal repository for the diplomacy of the Crown, are found most conclusively in the transactions of the seventeenth century after the grant so made to the Keeper of the State Papers. In the 18 James I. Sir Thomas Wilson, Knight, Keeper of the State Papers, delivers to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer various treaties with France, with the United States, and with the Emperor, of various dates from 1522 to 1619, which are deposited in the Treasury, there to be safely kept.

In the same year, Sir George Calvert, Chief Secretary of State, delivers to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer the treaty concluded in 1621 between James I. and Christian IV. of Denmark. And in the 20 James I., Sir Robert Naunton, Knight, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, having borrowed various instruments relating to the transactions between Queen Elizabeth and the United States, returns them into the Treasury, there to be safely kept amongst the King's records.

Here placed, they could not even be inspected without some special authority: and an order of Council was required for their production even before that Board. With such a restriction upon them when required for affairs of state, it may be easily anticipated that private individuals would equally require a special authorization. Maturin Esnault, agent of the Order of St. Lazarus of Jerusalem in France, was thus empowered to search the records, but only in the presence of a sworn officer, and no copies were to be delivered to him without the assent of the Lord Keeper of the Great Seal. Elias Ashmole had a general order under the sign manual, when compiling his History of the Order of the Garter; and he has printed several documents from this repository. Rymer obtained a very special writ under the Great Seal, quite in the antient form, addressed to the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury and to the Chamberlains of the Exchequer, authorizing them to deliver out to him such and so many leagues, treaties, and other diplomatic instruments as he should require, according to indentures to be made between him and them, and many of which indentures are now remaining in the office.

MODE OF DEPOSITING INSTRUMENTS.—SIGNS.

XII. The plans antiently adopted for the arrangement and preservation of the instruments had many peculiarities. Presses, such as are now employed, do not seem to have been in use. Chests, bound with iron; —forcers or coffers, secured in the same manner;—pouches or bags of canvas or leather;—skippets, or small boxes turned on the lathe;—tills or drawers;—and hanapers or hampers of "twyggys,"—are all enumerated as the places of stowage or deposit. To these, reference was made, sometimes by letters, sometimes by inscriptions, sometimes by tickets or labels, and sometimes by "signs;" that is to say, by rude sketches, drawings, or paintings, which had generally some reference to the subject-matter of the documents.

Thus the sign of the instruments relating to Arragon is a lancer on a jennet; —Wales, a Briton in the costume of his country, one foot shod and the other bare; —Ireland, an Irisher, clad in a very singular hood and cape;—Scotland, a Lochaber axe; —Yarmouth, three united herrings;—the rolls of the Justices of the Forest, an oak sapling;—the obligations entered into by the men of Chester for their due obedience to Edward Earl of Chester, a gallows, indicating the fate which might be threatened in case of rebellion, or which the officers of the Treasury thought they had already well deserved;—Royal marriages, a hand in hand;—the indentures relating to the subsidy upon woollen cloths, a pair of shears; —instruments relating to the lands of the Earl of Gloucester in Wales, a castle surmounted by a banner charged with the Clare arms;—and the like, of which various examples will be found by inspection of the Kalendars and Memoranda.

coffers, and skippets of various sorts and sizes, all sufficiently curious and uncouth, together with various specimens of the hanapers woven of "twyggys," as described in the text.

One of these hanapers was discovered under rather remarkable circumstances. On the 15th Feb., in the 3d year of the reign of Richard II., Thomas Orgrave, Clerk, delivers into the Treasury, to be there safely kept, certain muniments relating to the lands and tenements in Berkhampstead formerly belonging to William the son and heir of John Hunt, and which the King had purchased of Dyonisia the widow of William de Sutton, and which are stated to be placed in a certain hanaper or hamper within a chest over the Receipt. Upon a recent inspection of a bag of deeds relating to the county of Berks, I found that it contained the hanaper so described, with a label exactly conformable to the entry in the Memoranda; crumbling and decaying, but tied up, and in a state which evidently showed that it had never been opened since the time of its first deposit in the Treasury: and within the hanaper, were all the several deeds with their seals, in the highest state of preservation.

LETTERS AND STATE PAPERS.

Letters and State Papers. Vol. i. p. 104, 200, 201.

XIII. Closely connected with the diplomatic instruments, are the Letters, Correspondence, and State Papers concerning the affairs of the Crown. The practice of preserving such muniments in the Treasury was established at an early period. Thus, it appears from Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar that the letters addressed to Edward I., as well from persons in England as from beyond the seas, of the 10th, 15th, 19th years, and from the 22d to the 35th year, or the conclusion of his reign, were placed in the Treasury in a great box bound with iron. Intercepted letters were deposited in like manner. In the 38 Ed. III., 16th April, the Treasurer and Chamberlains received from the Chancellor and the others of the King's Council, ten bundles of letters of aliens, which had been seized by Robert de Hull and his officers in the port of Dover; and they were placed in a chest with three locks in the chamber of the Tellers over the Receipt, in a bag of canvas. But on the 19th April these letters were, by order of Council, delivered out to certain merchants, who made oath that the documents did not concern the King, nor any person of the kingdom. It was probably suspected that these letters related to the remittance of money to the Papal Court, a practice which the Crown took great pains to repress; and repeated mandates and writs were issued for the purpose of intercepting such communications. All the papers and correspondence of Cardinal Wolsey were deposited in the Treasury after he had been found guilty of the præmunire. And the correspondence of Cromwell came in like manner into the Treasury.

By such successive transmissions and deposits, the extremely valuable and important collection of Letters and State Papers in this Treasury was formed; a collection of which the following is a very brief and imperfect summary. I trust, however, that means will hereafter be afforded of completing a full catalogue of them in detail.

Letters and despatches transmitted from Ponthieu, during the period of the disputes between Edward II. and the French Court, with much incidental intelligence relating to the affairs of France and Flanders and other current transactions.

Originals and drafts of despatches and letters, some from the Council of Gascony, or other persons in office there, others from Hugh le Despencer, and also letters addressed to him at various periods in the reign of Edward II.

The largest and most curious portion of this correspondence was found in bundles which evidently had not been opened since the period that they were first deposited in the Treasury. Many portions of this correspondence approach more nearly to the character of familiar letters than is usually the case with the epistolary communications of the period to which they belong.

Correspondence addressed to Edward the Black Prince, about 16 Ed. III. — Despatches, answers to applications for the loan of money, the supply of provisions, and other similar matters.

Many of these letters are very characteristic and interesting.

An ample correspondence relating to the affairs of Scotland in the reigns of James V., Mary, and James VI., including many original letters of James V.; despatches of Archdeacon Magnus, Lord Dacre, &c.

Letters to and from Lord Lysle when Deputy of Calais, bound in volumes, containing many very interesting details, both of public occurrences and private affairs.

The Wolsey correspondence, bound in volumes, removed, as before mentioned, into this Treasury when the Cardinal was found guilty of the præmunire.

The Cromwell correspondence, comprising, as it would seem from the bulk and number of the letters, almost the whole mass of the papers of this eminent statesman during the period that he continued in power; and deposited, as before mentioned, in this Treasury under his attainder.

The Wolsey and Cromwell collections, besides their great value as inedited illustrations of the general history of the realm, contain many surveys of monasteries and other important documents, either collaterally or directly affording evidence of rights of property. (Note V.)

Letters and State Papers.

These letters contain many particulars of the negociations with the Court of Rome, and also afford a full view of the endeavours made to win favourable opinions from the foreign universities.

And, in addition to the above, the Treasury possesses Cranmer's Correspondence. Letters addressed to Henry VIII., Cardinal Wolsey, &c. by royal personages, including many from Margaret Queen of Scots and Mary Queen of France. An ample series of letters from the Marquis Pescara, from the Duke of Milan, and other Italian princes. Notes of intelligence transmitted to Henry VIII. by his ambassadors. Letters in cypher, and a great number of similar documents, partly belonging to the class of epistolary correspondence, and partly included in the class of diplomacy.

Some of the letters addressed to Hugh le Despencer from Gascony are written on very stout and beautiful vellum, others, on paper, a sound and strong fabric, well sized, and such as may altogether be called a good article. And though in the Tower, there are a few letters upon cotton paper, yet parchment or vellum was generally used, and these are amongst the earliest examples of any continued correspondence upon the more commodious material, which in England was very rarely employed. It is highly probable that, in the South of France, the supply was received from the Moorish merchants or manufacturers of Spain.

Letters and State Papers.

It is a curious fact, that amongst the antient correspondence some letters, apparently of the reigns of Henry VI. and Henry VII., yet remain unopened; and I have thought it expedient rather to allow them to continue in this state, as specimens of the antient mode of sealing letters missive, than to break the wax, for the purpose of becoming acquainted with the intelligence thus concealed. Other examples of similar neglect or inattention may be adduced. Many of the military musters, required at the time with so much urgency, and grounded on events which put the whole kingdom in a ferment, were found closed with the seals of the commissioners. And we also have here numerous bundles of depositions of witnesses in suits in the Star Chamber, the Court of Requests, and the Court of Wards, still folded and sealed, even as when they were transmitted by the examiners: the eager and angry litigants having, whilst contending before an earthly tribunal, been snatched away from their disputes to the silence of the tomb.

(Note VI.)

BILLS OF PRIVY SEAL AND PRIVY SIGNET.

XIV. Connected in some respects with the correspondence, are the Bills of Privy Signet and Privy Seal deposited in this Treasury. In the earlier periods, these documents not only contained the warrant to the Great Seal, but also conveyed the King's private directions and individual sentiments, besides being the means of exercising several branches of his royal prerogative.

The documents in question extend, in very large quantities, from the reign of Edward III. to Charles I., though not so as to form a complete series. The Privy Signets and Privy Seals of the earlier reigns afford much historical information. The Privy Signets of Queen Elizabeth, soliciting loans throughout England for the defence of the kingdom against the Armada, and of which there are several hundreds, are singularly interesting, from the circumstance that a large portion were returned into this Treasury with the amounts of the sums contributed by the parties. In the two more modern or last reigns of which the Privy Seals and Privy Signets exist, viz. James I. and Charles I., the collection, though offering many chasms, is of great practical value.

Registers were made in the reign of Edward I. of the writs, both under the Great Seal and under the Privy Seal, which had been directed into the Wardrobe, and, as appears from Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar, they were deposited in the Treasury. Of the registers from the 12th to the 35th of Edward I., one year is stated to have been deficient, and of another, the quires containing the entries for two months only, were extant.

Bills of Privy Seal and Privy Signet.

These important records are no longer in the Treasury, but some documents of a class, not dissimilar, are still preserved.

Such is the original register of the Privy Seal of Edward the Black Prince, from July, 20 Ed. III., to January, 21 Ed. III., forming one volume, on paper. This register, when considered in connection with the correspondence of the Black Prince (see p. xxxi.), is of considerable importance in showing the manner in which he exercised his regalities in North and South Wales, the Marches, Flint, and Chester. And it is worthy of remark that commissions for holding the Great Sessions, &c. issued under this Privy Seal in the same manner as under the Great Seal.

FINES AND CONCORDS.

XV. The proceedings of the King's Courts of Justice were placed in the Treasury, the proper repository for documents, justly reckoned the most important muniments of the Crown. As I have before observed (p. xvi.), instruments analogous to the Fine and Concord, or the indentures evidencing the transfer of lands by the real or fictitious compromise of a suit in the King's Court, were preserved, previously to the Conquest, in the Hoard or Treasury. In the reign of Henry II. this mode of conveyance by Fine and Concord appears as an established branch of the legal polity of the realm. The chirographs in this Treasury, which extend from Henry II. to George III., are the most perfect series known to exist in Europe, and probably in the world, of a strictly legal record. They also afford the most remarkable example of that adherence to antient usage and precedent, which, until the present era, characterized our nation and our law; for, the first Fine in this repository, of the 25th Hen. II., and the last, which was levied previous to the 31st December 1833, — when by virtue of the statute 4 and 5 of His present Majesty, Cap. lxxiv., this mode of assurance was abolished, — exhibit an unaltered principle, and scarcely any substantial variation in form.

When documents were delivered into the Treasury, it was the custom to execute an indenture between the Functionary who made the transmission, and the Officers of the Treasury, the latter acknowledging the receipt thereof. (§ IX.) Of these indentures, it is evident that a large proportion are lost. The earliest existing instrument of this class relates to the deposit in the Treasury of certain "pedes finium," 16 Ed. I., such delivery being made to the Treasurer and Chamberlains by John Bacon, Clerk, Custos Brevium of the Common Pleas. When the documents accumulated, similar transfers were successively made, at various intervals, in the reigns of Ed. I., Ed. II., and Ed. III., as may be seen by reference to the indentures. In 48-50 Ed. III. the party delivering the "pedes finium" is described as the Chief Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, and the same Officer makes the transmission in the reign of Richard II.

The indentures of delivery made in the reigns of Hen. IV., Hen. V., and Hen. VI. are not to be found. In the 4 Ed. IV. Sir John Fogge, Knight, Custos Brevium of the Common Pleas, delivers the fines from the 21st to the 39th Hen. VI. From hence, the indentures of the deliveries are wanting, until we arrive at the reign of Charles II., when a writ issued, directed to the Custos Brevium of the Common Pleas, commanding him to deliver to the Treasurer and Chamberlains all the "pedes" of fines levied in the reigns of Hen. VI., Ed. IV., Ed. V., Ric. III., Hen. VII., Hen. VIII., Ed. VI., and Philip and Mary, remaining in his custody, the same to be kept in the Treasury "prout moris est;" and they were brought in accordingly, and an indenture executed in the antient form. A similar writ issued in the reign of James II. for the transmission of the "pedes finium" of the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. The same process issued in the reign of Queen Anne for the transmission of the fines from the last year of James I. to the 12 Charles II., and in both these last-mentioned cases the transmission was also testified by indenture. In the reign of George II. the last writ extant, and which is precisely in the antient form, was issued for the transmission of the fines of the reigns of James II. and Charles II. The Fines were duly delivered; but the indenture, if any was executed, is not now to be found. From this period I cannot trace any fresh transmission until 1809, when ten cart-loads of chirographs, each cart-load being about one ton in weight, and containing in the whole upwards of 1,400 bundles, were, under the directions of the Commissioners on the Public Records, and at the request of the Chirographers of the Common Pleas, removed into this Treasury. They had been partly deposited in a vaulted chapel adjoining the Temple Church,—now demolished, much to the regret of the architectural antiquary,—and partly in the Chirographers office; and this delivery, which included some bundles as high as the reign of Edward II., completed the series to the last year of George II. The fines of the reign of George III. have continued in the Chirographers office, with the exception of one bundle which came to the Treasury.

XVI. In the same manner as the Fines are thus preserved here, so was and is this Treasury the proper and central repository for all the other records of the Courts of Justice; and which have been transmitted here from time to time, by the Officers or Functionaries having charge of them. In their various classes, these records extend from the reign of Richard I. to George II.; and the memoranda of the deliveries made thereof, though incomplete and offering many chasms and deficiencies, are amply sufficient to show the system which was pursued.

In the 31 Ed. I. John de Berewick restored or returned into the Treasury various rolls of proceedings before the Justices Itinerant, as well rolls of common Pleas as of Pleas of the Crown, which had been lent to him, probably for his own eyre. And he also returned in like manner an Estreat Roll, and certain proceedings begun as far back as the 12 Ed. I.

In the 9 Ed. II. the executors of the will of Robert de Retford, who repeatedly appears as one of the King's Justices, delivered a very large number of the rolls and writs of the Justices in Eyre, viz. of John de Berewick, Martin de Littlebury, John de Insula, and many others, who had acted in that capacity from the 39 Hen. III. to the 8 Ed. II. Later in the same reign various rolls of the delivery of the gaols of Huntingdon, Cambridge, Aylesbury, Oakham, Leicester, Waltham, and Bedford, from the 2d to the 6th Ed. II., were deposited by Justice Mutford in the Treasury. In the 3 Ed. III. John de Stonore succeeded to William de Herle, in the office of Chief Justice of the Common Pleas. On this occasion a proceeding took place which, with other examples of the same nature quoted hereafter, will show how the business relating to the custody of the records was transacted.—A writ was directed to the Ex-chief Justice Herle, commanding him to deliver all the Rolls and Records in his keeping to the Treasurer and Chamberlains, and accordingly he did transfer the rolls to them; and an indenture was executed between the parties. In this instrument the records, which extend from Michaelmas Term, 11 Ed. II., to Trinity, 3 Ed. III., are very minutely described, roll by roll: and it also specifies the number of membranes of vellum contained in each roll,—a particular of considerable importance,—since it affords the means of ascertaining whether the rolls now in the office are or are not complete. The rolls being thus in the custody of the Treasurer and Chamberlains, and another writ being issued after the appointment of Chief Justice Stonore, commanding the Treasurer and Chamberlains to deliver the rolls to him, in order that he may be enabled to do the duties of his office, an indenture was executed accordingly, in which the rolls which he receives, are enumerated exactly as they were delivered; that is to say, it repeats the instrument of 7 Oct. 3 Ed. III. word for word. In the 5 Ed. III. Stonore is amoved from office, and he re-delivers the rolls, with the addition of those to Hilary, 5 Ed. III., pursuant to the writ directing him in that behalf, to the Treasurer and Chamberlains; and Herle, being re-appointed Chief Justice, the rolls are re-delivered to him.

In the same reign John de Cantebrig', who had been one of the Justices Itinerant in Bedfordshire, delivered numerous judicial records to the Treasurer and Chamberlains. They consisted of rolls "de juratis "et assisis," presentments "de corona" made before the Justices, bags containing Coroners rolls, bags of proceedings before the Justices of the peace, and other records of a similar nature; and it should seem that the Treasurer and Chamberlains were then calling in the records, for about the same time Adam de Stayngreve, Clerk of the Eyre in the counties of Northampton and Bedford, was commanded to remit all records in his possession; and he accordingly did deliver up all original and judicial writs, rolls, and records touching his Eyres from the 1 Ed. The rolls of Trinity Term, 5 Ric. II., are equally noticed as wanting, in consequence of the insurrection in the county of Kent, and other rolls are stated to be damaged and in part decayed. In the same reign the clerk of the Norfolk circuit delivers, 20 Hen. the 1st of the King: and there are many other entries in the memoranda of the delivery of special assizes and judicial rolls for particular places in the preceding reigns.

A chasm now ensues until the 22d Charles II., when, pursuant to a writ addressed to Chief Justice Vaughan, the latter issued his warrant, addressed to the Keeper of the Records of the Common Pleas, commanding such Keeper to deliver the rolls and other proceedings from the end of the reign of Richard II. to the 1st year of the reign of Henry VIII. This was duly obeyed, and an indenture was executed, in which the receipt of the records was acknowledged by Sir Robert Long, Baronet, Clerk or Deputy of the Lords Commissioners of the Treasury, and Edward Fauconberge and John Lowe, Gentlemen, Clerks or Deputies of the Chamberlains of the Exchequer. The schedule specifies the rolls thus delivered, extending from Michaelmas, 1 Hen. IV., to Trinity, 23 Hen. IV., and notices some which are wanting.

And, lastly, the bundles of judicial and other writs to the conclusion of the reign of James II. were removed at the same time and by the same writs, in the reigns of Charles II., James II., and George II., as the fines.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

The mandatory portions of the last writs of James II. and George II. direct the removal, not merely of the fines and judicial writs, but of all the rolls and records of the courts; and it is probable that the rolls of pleadings were not delivered, in consequence of some want of exertion on the part of the Deputy Chamberlains or of the Keepers of the Records. The rolls therefore never came in. But a Sign Manual was issued by the Queen Guardian, dated 1st September 1732, noticing that there were divers books, records, and papers relating to the proceedings of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, then lying in the dust and rubbish in a room over the House of Commons, in the custody or possession of Thomas Spence, Esquire, Sergeant-at-arms attending the house; and the warrant accordingly directs their removal into the Treasury.

Proceedings of the Courts of Justice, &c. Vol. iii. p. 448.

By means of the deliveries above noticed, and of other deposits and transmissions, of which the periods cannot now be ascertained, the great mass of judicial records now in this Treasury was accumulated.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

These records may be enumerated under the following general heads:—

Proceedings of the Courts of Justice, &c.

Rolls and Pleadings at Common Law before the King's Justices, usually denominated the Rolls of the Curia Regis, from 5 Ric. I. to 56 Hen. III.

Although in this era the Courts of King's Bench and Common Pleas became separated, yet the distinction between them is not sufficiently apparent in the records to admit of their distribution into classes, and they are therefore kept in one series. To these proceedings of the courts of the English common law, nearly the same remark applies as to the Fines, namely, that they constitute the most antient consecutive series of judicial proceedings now existing in Europe; the only records of this nature approaching them in antiquity, being the Registers of the Parliament of Paris, which do not commence 'till 1254. I have recently edited the Rolls of the reign of Richard I. and of the first year of John; and the continuation of the reign of John is now in the press. They abound with the most valuable information respecting our political and legal antiquities, as well as concerning the general state and condition of society.

Rolls of the Court of King's Bench, or of the proceedings "coram Rege," from 1 Ed. I. to 10 Hen. V.

In the earlier portion of this series, the pleadings recorded on these rolls are of a very miscellaneous nature, and take a wide range. Besides the Pleas which are more usually considered as belonging to the Court of King's Bench, we find here the trials or inquests arising out of bills or petitions presented to the King in Council, or to the King in Parliament: proceedings "de probatione ætatis," being the examinations by which the heir proved his full age, previously to obtaining livery of his lands; and a variety of other legal transactions in which the prerogatives of the Crown were concerned. These rolls also contain numerous enrolments of deeds and charters. The rolls of some few terms are deficient.

the Rolls of the King's Bench, although they present us with some intermixture, in the earlier reigns, of parliamentary and other extraordinary proceedings. They also contain valuable enrolments of deeds and charters.

Proceedings of the Courts of Justice, &c.

Pleadings "coram Rege et Consilio," Hen. III. and Ed. I., of various years. Pleadings before the Marshal of the King's Household, Ed. I. to Ed. III.

These, which have been always considered as a portion of the general series of judicial rolls, are retained amongst them.

Rolls of Pleadings and Proceedings before Justices Itinerant, the Justices of Assize, Justices of Oyer and Terminer, Justices of Gaol Delivery for the several counties of England, the Palatine jurisdictions only excepted; proceedings before the Justices of Peace, and of Labourers, and Coroners rolls, from Hen. III. to Hen. VI.

The nature of these rolls is indicated by their titles. Many proceedings upon special assizes are also included amongst these rolls; and of these several are still remaining in the antient bags which contained them when first deposited. Their contents afford much insight into the general state of the country.*

Proceedings of the Courts of Justice, &c.

Pleas before the Justices of Trailbaston; Inquests taken before the Justices appointed to inquire into the oppressions committed by the King's ministers; Quo Warranto and Hundred Rolls; Hen. III. to Ed. III.

A portion of these inquiries into the abuse or undue claim of liberties and franchises, or of the title under which they are held, have been printed; but very many are inedited.

Pleas of the Forest; Perambulations, views, surveys, &c.; Petitions presented to the Justice seat; Inquisitions "de Statu "Forestæ;" Inquests, indictments, and presentments before the Justices of the Forest, from Hen. III. to 16 Car. II.

The Justices of the Forest constituting only an occasional court, these records became peculiarly placed under the immediate direction of the Crown. Thus, upon the holding of the Iter and Court of Justice seat for the Forest of Dean, 10 Car. I., a Sign Manual issued, directing the Treasurer and Chamberlains to deliver the Regard Rolls "and other the Rolls of former antient "Iters of the Forest" to the Clerk of the Iter, John Keelinge, Esquire. But with respect to the rolls of the Iter and Justice seat of Waltham Forest, as being nearer London, the Chamberlains are commanded, by warrant under the Sign Manual, to attend the Justice seat and the sessions thereof with all the writings and records in their charge, in such manner as the same should be required by the Solicitor General and the Queen's Serjeant-at-law.

Vol. iii. p. 444, 445.

In 1670 we find an Order of Council made, directing that the proceedings in the Eyre, 4 Ed. III., should be delivered to Aubrey Earl of Oxford, Warden and Chief Justice in Eyre of the Forests South of Trent, or that some fit and proper person should be sent to attend therewith during the Justice seat, and that they should be returned again into the Office. The then Keeper of the Records considered, however, that, strictly speaking, this order was not sufficient. He states, in his reply, that an order ought to have been made by the Lords of the Treasury; "yet in regard that "from the shortness of time they could "not get such warrant, and rather that the "King's service should not be neglected,

" he thinks fit and agrees that the records " should be delivered to one of the mes- " sengers of the Receipt of the Exchequer, " to attend the Earl of Oxford with the " same at the justice seat."

RECORDS OF PARLIAMENT.

XVII. The Records of Parliament, were, like the proceedings of the King's courts or tribunals, transmitted into this Treasury. In the forcer of leather bound with iron, was deposited the exemplification under the Great Seal, in Latin and in Roman, of the Statute of King Edward, the son of Henry, made at Gloucester in the month of August in the 6th year of his reign. This is an important entry, as showing that the French or Roman text and the Latin text are of equal authenticity. In the same forcer, was an exemplification of the Statute of Merchants, made at Westminster in the 13th year of the reign of the same king: and also another exemplification of the Statute in Latin, from which it should appear, that the first exemplification was of a French or Roman text: also an exemplification of the Statute of " Quia " Emptores;" a copy of the ordinance

The Statutes of Wales were placed, as appears by the Kalendar, in a wooden coffer with other records appertaining to the principality; and in 16 Ed. II. the "Liber de Parliamentis" was delivered by Walter Stapleton, Bishop of Exeter, into the Treasury. This delivery appears from an entry upon the Pell Rolls; and, as the book is not mentioned in the Kalendar, it proves, what we must regret, that, however ample, it does not afford a complete synopsis of the contents of the Treasury. This "Book of Parliaments," described as containing 24 quires, was, on the 28th February, 31 Ed. III., delivered to David de Wollore, the same being to be brought back by him to the Treasurer and Chamberlains before Easter then next: but whether so returned or not, I have reason to suppose that it is the volume known as the Vetus Codex, containing proceedings of the Parliaments of Edward I. and II., and now in the Tower.

Records of Parliament.

At present there are in the Treasury eleven rolls of parliamentary proceedings of the following years of Edward I., viz. 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 28, 29, 30, 33, and 35, heretofore contained in a bag of canvas, and which seem to be the rolls and memoranda to which the Kalendar refers. The other parliamentary documents are the following:

Two antient rolls, containing the Statuta Walliæ, both probably coeval, and being probably those noticed in the Kalendar.

The Statute of Winchester. A bill or schedule, in a coeval hand, but evidently intended for use, and not a record.

A portion of the Rolls of the Parliament begun the 2d December 8 Hen. V.

The Act of Resumption, of 28 Hen. VI.

Amongst the parliamentary documents, may be classed a great number of highly curious drafts of bills, either passed into statutes in the reigns of Henry VII. and Henry VIII. or intended to be passed or presented to Parliament. Very many of these drafts relate to the reformation of the church and the establishment of the royal supremacy, and have received repeated alterations and amendments; others, again, have the appearance of being merely abortive propositions or theoretical schemes for legislation. A considerable portion of these drafts seem to have been found amongst Cromwell's papers; others were evidently intended for the King. Here are also several copies—broadsides—of the "Acte "declarynge the establysshment of the "successyon of the Kynges moste Royall "Majestie in the Imperyall Crowne of "this Realme," (25 Hen. VIII. Cap. 22.) printed by Bertholet, and, such as were probably transmitted for promulgation, to the Sheriffs throughout the kingdom.

COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES.—COURT OF REQUESTS.—COURT OF STAR CHAMBER.

* The Court of Wards and Liveries, suspended by the Commonwealth, was formally suppressed by the statute which abolished the military tenures. (12 Car. II. Cap. 24.) The Court of Requests, which in fact was a committee of the Privy Council, was declared an illegal court by a judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in the reign of Elizabeth (4 Inst. Cap. 9.), but it does not appear to have been entirely extinguished until the abolition of the Star Chamber by the statute of the 16 Car. I. Cap. 9.

" and decaying in certain rooms in His " Majesty's Palace at Westminster," in the custody of the Usher of the Black Rod, they were, by the Sign Manual of the 1st September 1732, removed into this Treasury.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

The proceedings in these Courts corresponded, in most respects, with that of the equity side of the Courts of Chancery and Exchequer, and their records are of two descriptions: viz.—books, in which the various proceedings of the courts are entered,—and files or bundles of bills, answers, depositions, accounts, proceedings before the Master, and other documents of a similar description.

Court of Wards and Liveries. Court of Requests. Star Chamber.

The books of the Court of Wards consist of fifty-nine volumes of books of orders and decrees, 1 Edward VI. to 21 Charles I., the proceedings being entered, as before remarked, in the same style and manner as the orders of the Court of Chancery; entries of sales of wards and of contracts for marriages, eighteen volumes, 5 Henry VIII. to 21 Charles I.; entries of petitions and compositions for wardships, seven volumes, 8 James I. to 20 Charles I.; certificates of process issued by the auditors in the reign of James I.,

three volumes; together with very many other volumes of accounts, surveys, extents, transcripts of inquisitions, leases, particulars of dowers, jointures, and other charges, as well as the minute books of the registrars. The books of the Court of Requests consist of the orders and decrees, affidavit and minute books, and books of miscellaneous entries, extending from Edward VI. to Charles I.

Court of Wards and Liveries. Court of Requests. Star Chamber.

The bundles and files of detached documents belonging to both Courts, which are principally upon paper, are very numerous, but remain as they were first delivered,—heaped up in stacks and piles,—in a state in which it is not possible to use or consult them. A large sum would be required for the purpose of cleaning and binding them: and it is greatly to be regretted that the needful supplies, without which these records are as so much waste paper, have not hitherto been obtained.

The books, however, are for the greater part quite fit for use. Those of the Court of Requests, which were decaying, have been repaired and bound, and they afford much valuable information. The Books of the Court of Wards are in every re-important proofs of descents and alliances, and of the various rights of property. With respect to the Books of the Court of Requests, doubts have been raised with regard to their legal admissibility; be this as it may, they are nevertheless fully available for all points of literary inquiry, and they contain an ample store of materials for local topography and family history; but though fully accessible, they have not hitherto been so employed.

Court of Wards and Liveries.

Besides the transcripts of inquisitions in the books of the Court of Wards, there is an extensive series of duplicates of inquisitions returned into the Court, and from which the transcripts were probably made. Very many original title deeds, delivered in by parties pending proceedings, yet remain amongst the documents of the Court; these also are of great value.

STAR CHAMBER.

Star Chamber.

All the pleadings and proceedings of this Court which were on the file, that is to say, the bills, answers, replications, pleas, and demurrers, together with the depositions, are deposited in this Treasury, extending from the reign of Henry VII. to the dissolution of the Court.

They are very numerous, and as important as they are extensive; equally illustrating public and private history. They are now as they were brought in, tied up in bundles, and cannot be consulted with convenience; it is, therefore, most desirable to bind them in volumes, the only form in which they can be preserved and made readily accessible; and a portion of the proceedings of the reign of Henry VII. have been so arranged.

None of the orders or decrees of the Court of Star Chamber are to be found. In the Report of the Committee of the House of Lords, in 1719, it is stated, "the last notice of them that could be "got, was that they were in a house in "St. Bartholomew's Close, London," and it is much to be apprehended that they have been destroyed. Anterior to the reign of Henry VIII. there are some proceedings in suits by bill and answer before the Council, analogous to those of the Star Chamber, but it is not entirely certain whether they belong to the Court properly so called.

DOMESDAY.

Domesday.

XIX. The King's Treasury would, under any circumstances, be the fitting repository for all surveys or extents of the royal demesnes; and the series of these documents commences with the most remarkable document of this description now in existence—the volumes of Domesday.

Ellis's Introduction to Domesday, vol. i. 353.

Whether the Treasury in which the Domesday was first deposited, may have been at Winchester or at Westminster, the nature of the custody was the same; and the mode of obtaining authentic transcripts of the Book, by writs addressed to the Treasurer and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, resulted from their being the legal keepers of this, the most antient of our existing records. The two volumes are in excellent preservation, though it is to be deplored that they have been re-bound in russia-leather; the antient covers, brass bossed and brass cornered, and of massy board, are however in existence, perfect and unimpaired. There would be no difficulty in replacing the volumes within them, and it is contemplated to perform this operation as soon as a convenient opportunity shall offer. It is an antient rule of the Treasury, that the text or writing of the volume must never be touched by the finger or by the paper of the transcriber; and to this regulation the good condition of these volumes may be, in part, ascribed.

Besides the original Domesday, the Treasury possesses an abridgment, forming a very beautiful volume, apparently compiled early in the reign of Edward I. The handwriting is a fine specimen of caligraphy; the capitals are illuminated; in the margins of some of the pages are circles of gold, containing heads or half-lengths representing the chief tenants whose lands are therein described. Prefixed, are leaves of vellum with six illuminations or pictures of incidents from the legend of Edward the Confessor. These are in a rude and singular stile of art, possibly not later than the reign of Henry I. Peter le Neve has written a note on the fly-leaf, in which he states his belief that the volume was illuminated and transcribed in the reign of Henry VII.; a most singular error to have been committed by an antiquary of so much experience.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

Surveys of Crown Lands, Kirby's Quest, Court and Manor Rolls, Bailiffs Accounts, &c.

XX. The other documents, relating to the territorial rights of the Crown, and of which the series begins, as before mentioned, by Domesday, are of the most multifarious description; commencing with certificates of knights fees in the reign of Henry II. they extend to the reign of Charles II. In this place, therefore, I can only notice a very few particulars. Thus, amongst the more antient surveys, is an authenticated copy of the record called "Kirby's Quest." In 35 Edward I. Adam Kirkeby or Kirby, then Treasurer, and his fellows, made inquiry, according to the antient custom, by inquests or verdicts of juries, concerning the tenures in capite throughout several of the shires of England; and the result of these verdicts or inquests was a volume, which in some respects is analogous to Domesday, inasmuch as it comprehends all the immediate military tenants of the Crown. It is not sufficiently known that this and numerous other documents of the same class and description, furnish the materials for a connected history of the land, and also of the occupiers of the land in their several classes, from the Conquest to the abolition of the feudal tenures. And, although specially relating to England, they nevertheless greatly elucidate the general history of the progress of society in the European commonwealth.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

Surveys of Crown Lands, Kirby's Quest, Court and Manor Rolls, Bailiffs Accounts, &c.

The very numerous Court or Manor Rolls in the Treasury are interesting, not only to the local topographer, but also as valuable elucidations of that customary law which has preserved so many portions of the antient policy of the Anglo-Saxons. And though I will not affirm that amongst them are the oldest specimens of such muniments extant, yet I do not recollect ever having seen any so early as the rolls, remaining here, of the manor of Ledcombe, 52 Hen. III. The accounts of bailiffs, receivers, and ministers are as numerous and as valuable as the Court Rolls. A very important portion consists of the surveys and extents which were taken when lands became vested in the Crown, whether by reason of forfeiture, nonage, lunacy, idiotcy, or other incapacity. These records frequently recite at length the inquisitions by virtue whereof the Crown entered upon the property; in the latter periods, the evidences of title are often fully set out.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

As branches of the general series, may be noticed numerous accounts of the Receivers General of the Revenues of the Prince of Wales, and also of the Duchy of Cornwall. And another very large and special branch of extents and surveys, relates to abbey lands at the period of the dissolution, or so long afterwards as they continued in the hands of the Crown.

INVENTORIES OF FORFEITED AND OTHER PROPERTY.

Inventories of forfeited and other Property.

XXI. In the same manner as the extents taken of real property which had been seized into the King's hands, were returned into the Treasury, so were the inventories of personal property to which the Crown became entitled by forfeiture, or in any other manner, placed, as of course, in the same repository.

A very curious volume of this description is the inventory of the goods of the ill-fated "Duke of Ireland," and of Tresilian and others of his party, as they were appraised upon seizure thereof, 11 Ric. II.

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

A portion of the spoils was applied by the Bishop of St. David's, the Treasurer, in payment of a debt due to Sir Edmund de la Pole.

Inventories of forfeited and other Property.

Several of the inventories relating to property actually brought into the Treasury, will be found in the text of these volumes. The indenture specifying the fittings up of the chapel, the hall, the bed-chamber, and the ewery of Queen Isabella, is so minute as to bring the whole scene before us. Not less interesting are the particulars of her plate, as well as of the goods and chattels of Richard II., as found in the castle of Haverfordwest. These include his banners, amongst which we find the Mystical "Vexillum" of the arms of the Confessor.

Vol. iii. p. 233, 244, 359.

The inventory, extent, and other documents relating to the seizure made of the personal property of Robert de Gyenne, show, not merely the jewels and sideboard of a Bristol merchant in the reign of Edward III., but also the amount of his outstanding securities, at least of such portions as came into the King's hands. No less a sum than £2,280 10*s.* 8*d.* was due to this individual upon statutes merchant executed by the various debtors whose Inventories of forfeited and other Property.

Vol. ii. p. 219, 220.

The most curious, however, of these inventories, is that which was taken of the spoils made by Jack Cade, "otherwise Mortimer "the Traitor," exhibiting a strange and singular miscellany:—gold and silver plate, salt-sellers, and dishes; chalices and sacramental vessels contributed by the churches; an "old vestment and a pair of sheets;" a primer with clasps of silver; remnants of velvet and remnants of cloth of gold; a musk ball to smell at; a beryll for the eye; the nozell of a candlestick; a tankard without a lid; a purse "wrought in the "stool" with counters of silver, and one hundred and five pounds and fifteen shillings ready money; — the whole displaying in the most graphic manner the complete swoop made by Cade and his adherents, who neglected nothing which came in their way.—The heap of plunder is laid before you.

The inventories of personal property of later periods are extremely numerous, but they particularly abound in the reign of Henry VIII. As might be expected, the inventories of the property of Cardinal Wolsey hold a very conspicuous place amongst these documents. Nearly the same remark applies to Cromwell's inventories; they are valuable as portions of the biography of these distinguished personages. The inventories of the property of persons in inferior stations and walks of life,—merchants, country gentlemen, small farmers, and even cottagers,—which exist in this Treasury are scarcely less interesting, as furnishing ample materials for the history of society in its different grades.

PRIVATE OR FAMILY PAPERS.

Private or Family Papers.

XXII. There are in the Treasury great numbers of documents, which may perhaps be best designated by the name of family papers. They consist of copies of wills and deeds, correspondence, bills of parcels, vouchers, and other miscellanea. A proportion of these papers may probably have been brought into court or before the masters pending proceedings in the Court of Wards and of Requests; but others seem to have been brought in as connected with the property of crown debtors or accountants. These family papers, which are extremely diversified, would, if examined, throw much light upon private history: and through private history, upon the times to which they belong.

MILITARY SERVICES. — DOCUMENTS RELATING THERETO.

XXIII. A very important class of the documents deposited in the Treasury relate to military services, the payments made to the army and navy, and other matters connected with the war department. Amongst others, they consist of indentures between the King and the captains who engaged or contracted to levy troops for the service of the King; warrants for the payment of their wages; accounts of the paymasters of fortresses and garrisons; and muster rolls, of which a few may be particularized: — ampton, 14th May, 8 Hen. V. A similar muster roll of the "Retinence" of Hugh de Courtenay Earl of Devon, on board the Grace-Dieu; and the general roll of the men-at-arms, captains, esquires, vallets, and archers retained to proceed with the King, and taken at Southampton, 6th May, 8 Hen. V. The retinence of John Duke of Somerset, taken at Portsdowne in the county of Hants, 18th July, 21 Hen. VI.

All these "muster rolls" are in the form to which the name, still employed in our military nomenclature, no longer applies; that is to say, they are literally rolls of vellum or parchment, composed of membranes attached end to end, narrow in the breadth, but of several feet or yards in length.

In the reign of Henry VIII. general musters of all the "fencible men" were made at different intervals in the several counties, by virtue of commissions under the great seal: and the forces thus called out, were assessed to arms according to their substance or property: from the cottager who could only provide a staff and sling, up to the Esquire, who was charged, in more senses than one, with all the panoply of chivalry. Amongst other information obtained from these documents are the data for a calculation of the population of England in the rural districts. The array comprised all able-bodied males between the ages of sixteen and sixty; and thus, by the ordinary rules adopted in statistics, some approximation may be made to the total number of the population.

The accounts of the navy, which are principally of the reign of Henry VIII., are numerous and well preserved: and would, if diligently investigated by a competent inquirer, afford very ample materials for the history of naval architecture.

Nor are earlier documents illustrating the history of the navy wanting. Such is the roll containing the whole expenses of the fleet stationed at Calais, 8 Ric. II., under the command of the Prior of St. John of Jerusalem and Thomas Percy, Admirals as well of the Northern as of the Southern seas, the sum which on this occasion had passed through their hands being £4,872 9*s.* 4*d.* Another roll of the same class contains the particulars and expenses of the naval armament against Aquitaine, 17 Hen. Vol. iii. p. 202, 203. Sir H. Nicolas's Proceedings and Ordinances of the Privy Council, Vol. V. Pref. p. iv. Palgrave on the Council, p. 89.

XXIV. In the Treasury were deposited the Acts and Proceedings of the Council. On the 29th October, 28 Henry VI., Ralph Lord Cromwell, one of the Chamberlains of the Exchequer, delivered into the Treasury four rolls of such proceedings,—one roll of the 9 and 10 Hen. V. and the 1, 2, 3, and 4 Hen. VI.;—the second roll of the 5, 6, and 7 Hen. VI.;—the third roll of the 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th of the same King;—and the fourth of the 12th and 13th. All which rolls were put in a bag of canvas, remaining in a chest over the Receipt of the Duchy of Lancaster. These rolls are no longer in the Treasury, but they are unquestionably existing in the Cottonian collection *, though not in the shape of rolls, having been cut up and arranged in books, for the purpose of more convenient consultation. The period when they were

* Sir H. Nicolas says, "The identity of these records" (i. e. the rolls he has published from the Cottonian collection) "with those which are mentioned in the annexed "memorandum is indisputable." abstracted from the Treasury cannot be ascertained; but, had they existed in Agarde's time, they would, I think, have attracted his notice, and have been specified in his repertory. In the Cottonian collection also are other records of the proceedings of the Council, including the rough minute books, extending from Ric. II. to Hen. VI., and which were probably obtained in like manner from this repository. Some also are amongst the Spelman papers, now in private hands.

Several bills addressed to the King and Council are extant in the Treasury; they are analogous to those which were presented to the Council sitting as the Court of Requests; but it appears, from various circumstances, that they were deposited here before the transfer of the proceedings of the last-mentioned Court in the reign of George II.

"great membranes or pells of memoranda," commonly called the Pell Rolls. The Issue rolls. The Receipt rolls. The "Jornalia," or rolls upon which, as the name imports, the transactions of the Treasury were entered day by day as they arose. Accounts of the receivers of subsidies and talliages. Rolls of talliages imposed upon the Jews. Accounts of receivers of the customs, as well in England as in Calais and other antient dependencies of the Crown. Accounts of butlerage and prisage, and books of account of the Treasury, extending from Henry III. to Charles II. Duplicates of various of these rolls are in the Tower, and others in the Pell Office.* This series of records is of the most comprehensive nature, and although offering many chasms, they may, nevertheless, be resorted to as the foundation for the financial history of the country.

In the foreign department of the Treasury are included various accounts of the revenues and expenditure of the dominions

* For a full and interesting description of the Pell Records I must refer to Mr. F. Devon's Preface to his curious and valuable translations and selections from these documents; a work which, I believe, we owe to the exertions and zeal of the Right Honourable Sir John Newport, the present Custos of the Pell Records.

of the Crown of England within the kingdom of France; Rolls of Seisins, Tenures, Surveys, Accounts of Bailiffs and Receivers, &c. These records, extending from the reign of Edward I. to Henry VIII., and appearing to be the documents which De Brequigny saw when employed in his researches in this country, and to which he deservedly attached so much value*, relate to Ponthieu, Gascony, Calais and its Marches, Harfleur, and to many other territories and cities either possessed by the English Crown or under temporary occupation by the English. Such is the general character of these documents, which, whilst they furnish integral portions of English history, are also of the greatest value in elucidating the topography of France, but, as in similar cases, I can only particularize some few of the more prominent examples: —

Great and other rolls of the Norman Exchequer, of the reigns of Henry II., Richard I., and King John.

These records, which display the complete organization of the Duchy, will shortly

Rolls of the accounts of the Receivers of Ponthieu, and of the Bailiffs of Cresçy, Waben, and other Baillages of that County, in the reigns of Edward I. and Edward II. — Accounts of Nicholas de Louthe, Clerk, Treasurer, and Receiver of Ponthieu and Montreuil, from the 39th to the 42d Ed. III., in books, and with the duplicates of the Controller.

These documents include very remarkable items relating to the repairs of the royal castles, expenses incurred at the Court of France, and other matters relating to the dependence of the County upon the Crown of France. The accounts of Nicholas de Louthe in particular contain the receipts, as well ordinary as extraordinary, of those domains, and, like the other documents of this description, give very full details of the monies expended upon the buildings. The books are written on vellum with neatness and regularity; and it may be remarked that the antient accounts are generally made out with great clearness. The opinion of a celebrated modern historian (M. Sismondi), that in the middle ages accounts were kept so inaccurately and rudely as to render it impossible for a Sovereign to understand the state of his affairs, is entirely at variance with the facts, as exemplified by these and other records.

Exchequer and other Revenue Rolls.

The documents relating to Aquitaine are no less valuable; in many of them will be found the homages rendered to the Black Prince when the Principality was transferred to him by his father.

A very large roll, most carefully engrossed, containing a tabular return of the revenues of Aquitaine, as neatly and as regularly made out, as if it were intended to be brought before Parliament at the present day.

The "Process" made upon the transfer of the Counties of Tarbes and Bigorre to Edward III., pursuant to the treaty of Bretigny; — a very remarkable document in the Provençal language, and singularly illustrative of the great privileges and liberties enjoyed by the inhabitants of these provinces.

Accounts of the Treasurer of Harfleur, 3—7 Hen. V.

These accounts contain a rental of the Crown property in the town, consisting principally of houses, all let to the English residents; accounts of the monies received from the Treasury for the maintenance of the garrison, and the payments made accordingly. The rental is very interesting, inasmuch as it constitutes a species of Harfleur directory.*

The greatest bulk, however, is furnished by the documents relating to Calais, Guisnes, and the Marches. The importance of these possessions, whilst they necessitated a great annual expense, equally required a corresponding degree of vigilance on the part of the government: and the accounts of the receivers and treasurers are kept in such a business-like manner as to show how strict a responsibility was cast upon these officers. To these must be added the accounts of the Staple of Calais; amongst which will be found many very interesting particulars relating to the wool trade. All these documents would be of great use in a history of English commerce, as well as of what may be termed the colonial policy of antient England.

ROYAL LIBRARY.—BOOKS DEPOSITED IN THE TREASURY.

Royal Library. Books deposited in the Treasury.

XXVI. A portion, at least, of the Royal Library was deposited in the Treasury; nor will this circumstance excite surprize when we recollect the scarcity of books in the middle ages,—a scarcity which, though rather exaggerated by modern writers, was yet sufficient to render them objects of much care. In the reign of Edward II. some are noticed in the Inventory. The book "De Regimine "Regum," bound in red leather; the Rules of the Knights Templars, a little book; the Life of Saint Patrick, in one quire; and another book or quire containing the correspondence of Thomas a Beckett, probably the same which is now extant. The Treasury also contained a copy of the Chronicles of Roderick of Toledo, bound in green leather.

Royal Library. Books deposited in the Treasury. Vol. i. p. 104, 105, 106, 116. Vol. ii. p. 97, 154.

Amongst these volumes also was kept a "quire," or stitched book, described in the Inventory as written in "a language un-"known to the English," and which thus begins, "Edmygaw douit duyrmyd dinas." The language is obviously Celtic, and one of the most learned of our Cymric antiquaries considers it as showing that the original was a poetical composition, probably of the twelfth or thirteenth century, and that the verse, which should be read as follows, signifies — "Edmygav (I will "honor) Ddovydd (the Deity) dwyrinnydd "(the upholder) dinas (of the city)." — Yet in opposition to this version,

(Note VIII.)

I must not conceal the fact, that another authority has favoured me with a translation in which only one word agrees with the preceding; the second interpretation being to the following tenor: "Edmygau "(solemnity) donit (that overspreads) du "(gloom) yn (opposite) myd (a circular en- "closed) dinas (city)." Such are the expositions of those who well understand the antient British language. If a conjecture might be offered by one who confesses that he does not, I should say that the book, seized perhaps by Edward I., probably consisted of those Bardic prophecies by which the Britons have been so often excited against the Saxon invader. The Treasury also contained other various quires and rolls in the Welch language —"valde extranei," all of which have been long since lost; and the notice of them, like that of the Chronicle of England found in the Abbey of Aberbrothock, only remains to stimulate, without satisfying, our curiosity.

On the 26th Nov. 6 Hen. VI. the Deputy Treasurer received five volumes, to be carefully kept in the Treasury; viz. the entire Bible, a separate copy of the Book of Chronicles, a treatise on the Conception of the Virgin Mary, a Compendium of Theology, and the "Libellus de emenda-

On the 11th July, 12 Hen. VI., the Treasurer and Chamberlains delivered out of the Treasury to William Toly, Secretary of the Cardinal of England, a book called "Egesippus," and another book called "Liber de observancia Papæ," which the said William Toly was bound to return or restore on the 21st October then next. He does not, however, appear to have fulfilled his engagement 'till the 25th January following, when the books were placed in the chamber, or perhaps press, over the Receipt, with the other books. Afterwards the same books were lent again to William Toly, for a year and a half, by special command of the Treasurer of England.

On the 15th July, 13 Hen. VI., Ralph Lord Cromwell, as Treasurer, and the Chamberlains of the Exchequer, by advice and assent of the Lords of the Council, delivered to Richard Caudrey, Master of King's College in the University of Cambridge, divers books of the Civil Law, to be kept in the college so long as it should please the King, as appeared by an indenture thereof made, and which remained in the hanaper of Easter Term in that year; which books were afterwards, by writ of Privy Seal dated 2d July, 18 Hen. VI., directed to continue in the college for ever. And about the same time the Lord Cromwell took out of the Treasury, two volumes of chronicles late belonging to Henry V., and which were afterwards delivered to the Master of King's College by the Lord Treasurer.

There are now in the Treasury a great number of manuscripts: the majority belonging to the time of Henry VIII., some treating upon politics, upon commerce, or upon law, but principally upon matters of religion. Of these, as a catalogue raisonnèe of all the manuscripts in the Treasury is now in contemplation, I shall not speak further in this place, but dismiss them with the remark, that many of them seem to have been intended for the use of Henry VIII.: and that they show, in a very striking manner, the active spirit of investigation excited by the great changes which were then taking place in the ecclesiastical policy of the realm.

BLACK BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER.

Black Book of the Exchequer.

XXVII. As part of the original stock or library of the Treasury we may reckon the volume, termed the "Black Book," from the colour of its antient binding; well known by that name, but of which no accurate synopsis has hitherto been published; and I therefore subjoin the following summary:—

1 A table or perpetual kalendar for finding the Dominical Letters, &c. from the year 1184, about which time it seems to have been made, to the year 1688; Memoranda for lunar calculations, &c. (p.1.)

2 A kalendar or almanac for the twelve months of the year, in which, at various periods, short notices or memoranda have been introduced of remarkable occurrences, such as births and deaths of kings, battles, appointments of Treasurers, Chamberlains, and other officers of the Exchequer, &c. From the colour of the ink, the character of the handwriting, and other similar circumstances, these entries appear to be coeval with the events which they commemorate. The earliest passages so interpolated relate to the battles of Lewes and of Evesham; thus proving that the kalendar was written before these conflicts:

the latest incident thus noticed is the battle of Branxton Moor. (p. 2—8.)

Black Book of the Exchequer.

3 Drawings in outline, apparently coeval with the kalendars; viz. the Eagle, the emblem of St. John; the Bull, the emblem of St. Luke; an Angel, the emblem of St. Matthew, and a winged Lion the emblem of St. Mark, accompanied by verses from the several gospels. It is possible, that these representations and verses were used for the purpose of administering an oath, as upon the gospels. In the cabinet of M. Baudot at Dijon I saw, in 1815, a volume, if it can be so called, consisting of four wooden tablets, containing paintings or representations of the Evangelists, together with the initial verses of each gospel, upon which the antient Dukes of Burgundy took the oath of inauguration. Tablets of the same description are still used for the purpose of administering the oaths in some of the London companies. (p. 8, 9.)

4 Drawings in outline of the Crucifixion, the Virgin and Child, St. Michael, &c., with miscellaneous entries of writs and other documents relating to the Exchequer,—Latin and English verses, and proverbial or rhythmical lines, generally very idle. (p. 10—17.)

5 The tract commonly known as the "Dialogus de Scaccario." It is the tradition of the Office that this manuscript is the original autograph of Gervase of Tilbury, but this opinion is evidently without foundation. (p. 18—45.)

6 Oath of the Teller of the Exchequer. (p. 46.)

7 Oath of the Messenger of the Exchequer. (p. 46.)

8 Survey of the manor of Istleworth or Isleworth, taken by order of the Treasury "mense Maii anno xliiii^to^. [Ed. III.]" (p. 46 b.)

9 16 July, 50 Ed. III. Deed of sale made by Adam de Burscombe to the Treasurer and Chamberlains, on behalf of the King, of timber at Bodyham, to be employed at Calais. (p. 47.)

10 Admissions of Chamberlains, Tellers, and Clerks of the Pells, in the reigns of Henry VI. and Edward IV. (p. 47, 48.)

11 More rhymes and other idle verses. (p. 49.)

12 Tables for the calculation of salaries by the half year, quarter, week, and day, apparently of the reign of Edward II. (p. 49 b—56.)

13 Numerous miscellaneous entries relating to the Receipt of the Exchequer, admissions of Chamberlains, Tellers, Clerks or writers of the Pells, searchers, messengers, and of deputies in the various offices, orders of court, writs, deliveries of cocket and other seals, and other memoranda of a similar description, extending from 19 Ed. II. to the year 1715. Some original instruments are also inserted, or annexed to the leaves. (p. 56 b—103.)

The second part of the Liber Niger is a modern volume, containing entries of appointments of Treasurers and Chamberlains and other officers, orders of court concerning tallies, and other notices relating to the Receipt of the Treasury from the year 1698; the last entry being the appointment of the present Keeper of the Records.

THE REGISTERS OR BOOKS OF REMEMBRANCE.

XXVIII. The very valuable and important registers,—which in the Memoranda are designated as, the two books bound in wood and covered with red leather, and called the Books of Remembrances, otherwise the Registers,—also remain as part of the Treasury library. They appear to have been framed in the earlier part of the reign of Edward I., this fact being collected partly from the handwriting and partly from the instruments entered therein. These volumes are in folio, written with great care; and are evidently intended as the commencement of a regular and continuous register of public documents, but principally of those relating to foreign affairs and to the transactions of the dependencies of the English Crown. This plan, however, was not continued, and several blank leaves yet remain in the volumes. They contain as follows:—

Vol. A.

1 Full tables of contents, specifying also the chests or other places in which the originals of the documents transcribed in the book were deposited, together with drawings of the signs.

2 Papal bulls relating to the grant of the tenths of ecclesiastical benefices for the recovery of the Holy Land. (p. 1—28.)

3 Papal bulls relating to Guido and Aymeric de Montfort, dispensations and authorities for the confirmation of prelates; monitions addressed to the Kings of Scotland and the Princes or Kings of Wales for the observance of their fealty and obedience; excommunications of the King's enemies; and also concerning other public affairs. (p. 33—89.)

History and description of the Treasury of Records.

4 Documents relating to the disputes between Hugh de Luzignan Count of March and Angoulême and Henry III. These are inserted, probably by error, amongst the preceding bulls; but the misarrangement was noted by the maker of the antient tables of contents. (p. 77—81 b.)

The Registers or Books of Remembrance.

5 Documents relating to the marriage of John, son of the Duke of Brabant Lorraine and Limburgh, with Margaret the daughter of Edward I. (p. 117, 125.)

6 Powers, &c. relating to the treaty for the marriage of the Maid of Norway. (p. 127, 128 b.)

7 Chyrographs, contracts, articles, and other documents relating to the marriages between Johanna, daughter of Henry King of Navarre, Count of Champagne and Brie, and a son of Edward I., and between John, the eldest son of Florence Count of Holland and Elizabeth daughter of Edward I. (p. 129 b—132 b.)

(p.205—243.)

The will of Edward I., made at Acres; papal bulls and other documents relating to the liberation of Aymeric de Montfort; inquisitions concerning the parks of Freemantle and Howden; leagues with Castille; letters from the English Prelates concerning the war against the Welsh. (p. 308—314.)

ROYAL WILLS.

XXIX. In the Treasury were deposited the royal wills, which do not appear to have been considered as requiring probate in the ecclesiastical courts, whether in the earlier or the later periods of our history. When Bishop Stapleton compiled his Kalendar, the Treasury contained the following testamentary documents:—

Royal Wills. Vol. i. p. 108.

A transcript of the will of Henry II. This transcript is no longer extant; and our knowledge of the will is derived from the copy preserved in the Red Book of the Exchequer.

Original will of Edward I., made before his accession to the Crown, the testator being described in the Kalendar as "Edwardus "primogenitus Domini Regis Henrici "tercii." It is dated at Acre in the fifty-sixth year of his father's reign. This will is now lost, but a copy is entered, as before mentioned, in the Register; and it is therein stated to be deposited in the forcer bound with iron, and marked with the sign of an Index or Hand.

Furthermore, a transcript of a will of Edward I. without date, and two original wills of the same Sovereign, both indented, and made under the Great Seal and the seal of his executors, who thus, according to the antient practice, signified their acceptance of the trust: all those instruments are lost. The table of contents of the register further notices another will of Edward I., made at Ghent in Flanders in the twenty-sixth year of his reign, which was also deposited in the before-mentioned "forcer." But this document has shared the fate of the others, and can be no longer found; nor has any copy been preserved, for, although it was evidently intended that the will should have been entered in the register, the pages to which the table refers, are left blank by the neglect or inattention of the transcriber.

Vol. ii. p. 58.

The will of Richard II. was deposited in the Treasury in the last year of his reign, in a certain hanaper marked with the Hand or Index, and placed in the great chest bound with iron in the Treasury in the Abbey of Westminster. This document, dated the 16th April 1399, yet continues in the Treasury. It is authenticated by the Great Seal, the Privy Seal, the Privy Signet, and lastly by the Sign-Manual—"Richard "le Roy;"—Richard II. being (as far as has been hitherto ascertained) the first of our Sovereigns who employed this mode of authentication. There are only three Sign-

(See p. ci.)

Manuals of Richard II. extant, two of which are in this repository.

Will of Henry V. This will, dated 21st July 1417, is made by indenture. The Great Seal and the seal "which I use "in the governance of mine heritage of "Lancaster," are affixed thereto; and it was further closed under the Privy Seal, and subscribed with the King's hand. All the seals are lost: but, in other respects, the will is in good preservation.

Will of Henry VII., made at Richmond 30th March 1509. This will is superscribed and subscribed with the Sign-Manual. The Great Seal is appended as well as the Privy Seal, and on the dorse of the latter, the Privy Signet is impressed as a counter seal, —a practice common enough in France, but of rare occurrence in English diplomacy. The signet of "the Eguell (i. e. the Eagle) "in our owne custody" was also appended, but the seal is lost. The will itself is written upon vellum, bookwise, and has sustained much injury. It has, however, been carefully repaired.

Will of Henry VIII., dated at Westminster, 30th November 1546, "signed "with our hand in our palace of West-"minster," and with the memorandum indorsed of the enrolment thereof in the Court of Chancery:—"Irro' in dors' claus' "Cancellar' Dñi ñri Regis Edwardi Sexti "de anno regni sui primo."

Royal Wills.

The enrolment of the will has been cancelled, and the instrument itself disallowed by the legislature and the nation. The assertion, however, that the signature or sign-manual was produced by the stamp employed by Henry VIII. is evidently incorrect, as may be seen by comparison with an impression from the stamp which is kept with the will for that purpose; and the infirmities which compelled the King to abstain from the fatigue of using his pen, in affixing the sign manual to documents of less importance, may account for the difference,—if there be any,—between this signature and those concerning which no doubts have been raised. But I must confess that I cannot discover any variation, excepting such as may have resulted from the hardness of the quill, or the position and sufferings of the Monarch, recumbent upon his dying bed. The epithet of "mean" applied to the general character of the writing of the will, by those who would reject the document as spurious, is entirely gratuitous, for it is transcribed in the usual current handwriting of the time. If the chief signature be a forgery, the signatures of the eleven witnesses must be equally suppositious, and the care taken to cancel the enrolment, rather argues in favour of the authenticity of the document. The will has been recently carefully repaired, and bound as a book. It was previously rolled up and placed in a case in the shape of a hollow staff, which, as appears from an antient inscription, had previously contained Alfonso's Golden Bull; and it is the tradition of the office that it was so deposited for the purpose of concealment.

MATRIMONIAL ALLIANCES.

XXX. The documents relating to the matrimonial alliances of the Sovereign and the members of the Royal Family, appear from Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar, to have formed part of the original stock of the Treasury, and the memoranda show how they were deposited from time to time. Of these, very many yet remain, all objects of great curiosity. Such, for instance, are the instructions given by Richard II., dated the 26th of January in the nineteenth year of his reign, upon his intended marriage with Isabel of France, and the Sign-Manual subscribed—"le Roy R."—is, as I have before mentioned, another of the three earliest royal autographs in existence; the third is in the Museum.

Matrimonial Alliances.

The documents relating to the divorces and marriages of Henry VIII. form a groupe of singular interest: they consist of the following instruments:—

The testimonial of the Archbishops and Bishops, 1 Feb. 1529, declaring the expediency of referring the question of the validity of the marriage with Queen Katherine to the Papal See.

The special licence and dispensation granted by the Archbishop of Canterbury upon the marriage of Henry VIII. with Jane Seymour, they being related in the third degree. Dated at the "Manor of "Lambeth," 19 May 1536.

The notarial instrument, 29 July 1540, containing "the declaration of the Duke "of Suffolk, Lord Great Master of the "King's Majesty's Household, of the Earl "of Southampton, Lord Privy Seal, and "of Sir Thomas Wriothesley, Knight, one "of His Grace's Principal Secretaries, "touching certain their proceedings with "the Lady Anne of Cleves," and by which she abandoned her matrimonial rights. This very curious document is a book of vellum, very fairly written. Every page is signed by the commissioners, and their seals are appended.

EXPENDITURE AND HOUSEHOLD OF THE SOVEREIGN.

Expenditure and Household of the Sovereign.

XXXI. The documents relating to the various branches of the expenditure of the Court and the Sovereign, constitute a class connected with, and in some cases included, in the general rolls of the Exchequer; but in general they are reducible to distinct heads, of which the following is a brief enumeration:—

First, are those relating to the royal edifices. Amongst the earliest of these documents may be noticed the rolls of the expenses of building and repairing the castles of Edward I.,—Conway, Caernarvon, Beaumaris, &c. in Wales; and such accounts respecting these very interesting buildings continue throughout the reigns of Edward I., II., and III. Very numerous other documents relating to public and private edifices, accounts of expenses of their construction, as well as surveys of their state and condition, are extant in the Treasury; but they principally abound in the reign of Henry VIII. In the accounts of Hampton Court and Oatlands, which are made up with the greatest minuteness, the expenses of the different classes of workmen are first entered, and then the "emptions" or sums paid for materials. These accounts furnish important data for architectural inquiries. The payments made to the workmen distinguish every individual by his name.

Expenditure and Household of the Sovereign.

First appear the "Freemasons,"—Master, Wardens, Setters, and Lodgemen;—thus showing the truth of the assertion that the practical workmen were organized in due masonic order; and if any archives of the society exist, it might be interesting to examine these books, and to ascertain how far they correspond with the secret memorials of the mystic craft.

Next follow the "Carpenters," equally under their Master and Warden;—the Bricklayers in the like manner,—thus presenting a similarity to the masonic scheme;—and then, the remaining classes of artificers and labourers. The emptions, besides the prices of materials, contain the payments made to carvers and other artists of a higher grade. Here are also many documents relating to royal tombs and monuments; and amongst the papers connected with art, I may notice a very curious and minute description of the tapestry, worked from the Raphael cartoons. (Note X.

The Treasury is unusually rich in records concerning the royal household, and the private or personal expenses of the Court. The Kitchen Rolls of the reign of Edward I., of which there are many, not only state the provisions provided for the dinners, but the names of the principal guests; and in the rolls of the Stable, information of corresponding minuteness is given with respect to the horses. Many rolls exist of the disbursements of ambassadors, or rather messengers or agents; for the idea of a representation of the person of the Sovereign did not then exist. Amongst these is one of great curiosity, being the roll of an embassy to Constantinople and Trebizond. Several books of the Wardrobe are still remaining here, namely, of the reigns of Edward I., Edward II., and Edward III. Some similar volumes are now deposited in public libraries, having long previously, however, been in private hands; and I have not the slightest doubt but that they were abstracted from this repository by some active collector in the last century. There are also several wardrobe rolls of the same class and nature, containing nearly the same information as the wardrobe books, though not posted in the same manner, and many books of the royal household.

PAPAL BULLS.

XXXII. The documents relating to the affairs of the Church, in all their various branches and relations, form one of the leading classes of muniments in the Treasury. Amongst these, the Papal Bulls demand precedence. They constituted the first objects of Bishop Stapleton's care upon his new arrangement of the repository; and many of the bulls now extant are indorsed, as appears from the identity of the hand, by the clerk who transcribed or compiled his Kalendar. Generally speaking, these instruments, which extend from the thirteenth century to the Reformation, are well preserved. The vellum is peculiarly solid and massy; the handwriting, bold and distinct; and they form a series, unrivalled as far as this kingdom is concerned, of specimens of the style of the apostolical chancery, in which the peculiarities both of the bulls or leaden seals, and of the character, never yet accurately represented in any palæographical work with which I am acquainted, can be studied with advantage.

CHURCH AFFAIRS AND PROPERTY.

Church Affairs and Property.

XXXIII. Under this head may be ranked a very ample collection of muniments, registers, libels, petitions, charters, grants, leases, and other deeds, relating to the tithes, lands, and other possessions of churches and monasteries, compositions, unions, and endowments, and surveys of church lands, from the reign of Stephen to the sixteenth century, and to ecclesiastical affairs in the widest sense. Of these documents a large proportion, perhaps the largest, are connected with the Reformation. Thus, here are deposited the renunciations of the papal supremacy by the secular clergy, taken by virtue of the King's commissions throughout the several dioceses of the kingdom. These renunciations are contained in vellum books; at the head of each page is entered the declaration "that the Bishop of Rome "hath no greater power within the realm "of England than any other Bishop." The parochial clergy and the chantry priests sign according to deaneries: the members of some cathedrals and colleges of secular priests also sign.

Here also are the acknowledgments of the King's ecclesiastical supremacy by the monasteries and other regular clergy throughout the kingdom. These submissions are sealed with the common seals of the respective houses. No additional validity was imparted by these signatures, for whatever the corporation was competent to declare, could only be testified under their seal. But the proceeding shows how anxiously Henry laboured to fix upon each individual a personal responsibility;—he put his grasp upon every man's pen and hand. These documents, together with the renunciations, are very curious in another point of view, as containing the autographs of the great body of the clergy throughout the kingdom.

Other extensive branches of these memorials of the Reformation are the informations preferred against persons accused or suspected of heretical opinions, and the examinations of the parties, inventories of the effects of monasteries, and instruments relating to the disposal thereof.

Wolsey contributed a large class of ecclesiastical documents, which were deposited here upon his forfeiture:—the letters patent for his foundations at Oxford and Ipswich;—the bulls and instruments relating to the suppression of the monastic establishments with whose property these foundations were endowed; — schemes, plans, and proposals for their regulation, and accounts connected therewith.

SECURITIES FOR MONEY.

Securities for Money.

XXXIV. Securities for money, as well outstanding and appertaining to the Crown as those upon which payments had been made, and which were cancelled, were generally deposited in the Treasury. An extremely curious bundle is extant, containing the obligations made to Ursel Ben Sampson and Josceus of Cambridge, dated in the reign of Henry III., and which bundle also contains some tallies of the Exchequer of the Jews, probably the only ones now extant of the kind. The usual rate of interest, as appears from these documents, was two-pence per week for the pound. These bills, like the statutes merchant of Robert de Guienne, came without doubt into the Treasury upon the forfeiture of the creditors.

The cancelled debentures of the Wardrobe issued in the reigns of Edward II, and III., principally for military pay and supplies of army stores, are made out under the seals of the Chamberlains of the Exchequer, each having his own seal. Some of these seals are very beautiful, and are amongst the finest specimens extant of antient engraving. The seal is neatly impressed in wax on the front of the document. In our modern Exchequer bills, the seal, now a dry stamp, appears in the corresponding place, and, without doubt, it was retained as a reminiscence of the antient practice. Cocket bonds and other securities in relation to the customs, are also found here in great numbers, the latest being about the reign of Edward IV.

Various important documents were deposited in the Treasury concerning the mint,—a department most nearly connected with it. The Assay Rolls from 5 Ed. I. to 29 Ed. III. are extant, though much defaced by age. These were considered to be of so much value, that it was ordered by the Queen Guardian in Council, 11th June 1735, that they should be exemplified for better preservation. This order is recited in a certificate preserved with the rolls, but which proceeds to state, that "as these rolls are not records, no

"exemplification could properly be made "under the seal of any court, and for that "reason it is supposed nothing was done in "pursuance of the order by the officer in "whose custody they were. But this "present July 1750, the said order being "found in the custody of the Chamber-"lains of the Exchequer, and notice "thereof given to Richard Morley, Esq., "Inspector of the Records in the Court "of the Receipt of the Exchequer, (in "whose custody the said rolls now are,) "he, to answer the intention of the said "order so far as might be, caused exact "copies of the said rolls, so far as they "were found legible, to be made and "engrossed upon parchment for their "better preservation."—The clerks by whom the copies were made, Abraham Farley and Edward Strachey, were persons of well known industry and archæological knowledge. Their certified transcripts are very fair, and have every appearance of accuracy. And, as the original rolls have sustained further injuries by time and decay since the year 1750, the copies were most opportunely made.

Besides the assay rolls, there are here various indentures between the Crown and the masters and workers of the mint, as well in the Tower as in the provincial towns, verdicts of the pix juries, and other documents relating to the coinage, from the 37th Edward III. to the 2d George II. Amongst these instruments, are the letters patent under the Sign-Manual and Great Seal, 6th Elizabeth, whereby "the Court "and Office of the Mint is established to "be a court and office of itself; any act, "proclamation, schedule, or other thing "to the contrary thereof had or made "notwithstanding."

Agarde, in his repertory, notices "a bag "of cordover sealed with the seals of "Privy Councillors, not to be opened but "by the Prince and those of the Privy "Council, wherein are matters of secret." These "matters of secret" were disclosed in 1696, when the bag of cordover being worn out, it was brought before the Privy Council at the trial of the pix, and opened before them, and it proved to contain "old "stamps of coin" or dies, trial pieces of gold and silver, wedges of silver, and other articles relating to the coinage. It appears by a coeval memorandum in the margin of Agarde's repertory, that all these matters were put into a wooden box, and sealed with the seals of two of the Privy Council, being Lords Commissioners of the Treasury. At the trial of the pix in 1734, the box was brought before the Privy Council, and opened, and it was ordered that the Auditor and Chamberlains of the Exchequer, or their deputies, should make a schedule of the things contained in the box, and lay the same before their Lordships in the Council Chamber. The Deputy Chamberlain also informed their Lordships, that he had in his custody several stamps of coins, weights, and other things relating to the old coinage, which were found when one of the antient Treasuries was pulled down; and he was also ordered to make a schedule thereof.

The trial pieces of gold and silver, and the wedges of silver, have been removed from the custody of the keeper of the records, but he retained the antient dies, and many of them are still remaining in the office. They are nearly all of the York mint, with the exception of two or three from Durham. The reigns to which they belong are those of Edward I., II., and III., and Henry VII. and Henry VIII. They are all for silver coins, viz. the groat, the half-groat, and the penny. They are worn and injured by use, and it is presumed that, being unfit for service they were returned to the Exchequer, and new dies issued, as is still the practice. Many of them have been much corroded by rust; some, however, are in tolerably fair preservation, so that a blank of silver might be coined in them; a process which might give rise to the question, whether a coin so produced by an antient die, was or was not an antient coin. Considerable interest is attached to these antient dies, for very few others are known to exist. The Royal Mint does not contain above half a dozen; and they explain, in a very remarkable manner, the antient process of manufacturing hammered coin. (Note XI.)

The standards of weights and measures were also placed in the Treasury. Two still remain here, being the standard of the hundred weight; the rose and crown and a crowned E appear embossed upon them. The initial may refer either to Edward VI. or to Elizabeth, but more probably to the latter. According to the old practice of the Constitution, the standards of weights and measures were deposited in the keeping of the Sovereign; in our present era, they are placed in a committee room of the House of Commons,—a significant change of locality.

RELICS AND JEWELS.

Relics and Jewels.

XXXV. The relics constituted a most precious portion of the contents of the Treasury. The Black Rood and the "Crois "Gneyth," or cross of St. Neot, were here placed, upon which the Scottish nobles were sworn, in the vain expectation of securing their allegiance. The shrine which contained the cross of St. Neot, was pillaged when the Treasury was broken open by the connivance, it appears, of certain inmates of the adjoining Abbey. The inventory of the relics, of the 18th Edward III., also notices the "Virga Moysy," or rod of Moses, which re-appears at various intervals; but this, it may be suspected, was a sceptre so named. To the extremely curious lists and inventories of jewels I must content myself with a general reference. It may, however, be noticed that a large diamond set in a ring, was valued, 17 Edward II., at the sum of twenty pounds. In the reign of Richard II. diamonds are repeatedly mentioned, some of which are distinguished as flat, whilst in the 8th of Henry VI. one is described as pointed; from which we may collect that then, at least, the art of diamond cutting was known.

REGALIA.

Regalia.

XXXVI. The memoranda and inventories contain very curious notices of the Regalia. In the reign of Edward III. the King had four Crowns; viz. the great Crown, the second Crown, the third Crown, and the fourth Crown, called the Chaplet, all of which were, on the 16th June, 19 Ed. III., deposited, or rather re-deposited, in "a chest in the Treasury in the "Cloister of Westminster, near the Chapter "House, the key whereof is in the small "coffer of the Chamberlains in the Receipt "of the Exchequer." Vol. i. p. 156.

On the 25th of June, 1 Ed. IV., Henry Viscount Bourchier, Treasurer of England, delivered out of the Treasury, one great Crown called the "Rich Crown," the spurs of gold, and the Constable's staff, to be employed for the coronation. There is no previous notice — probably owing to the chasms and imperfections of the memoranda — of the deposit of the Constable's staff. Vol. iii. p. 1, 2.

Subsequently, the Crown was, by virtue of a writ of Privy Seal dated the 3d March, 2 Ed. IV., delivered by the Treasurer to "William Porte, Keeper of "the King's Jewels;" and in the indenture of receipt it is described as "the King's "great crown of gold called the Riche "Crown of King Edward, garnished with "four great balaces or rubies, four balaces "of a less sort, twenty-eight balaces of "divers sorts, forty-three emeralds of "divers sorts, forty pearls of divers sorts; "with a cap of silk embroidered, set with "five quatrefoils of gold, garnished with "four small sapphires, seven small garnets, "and twenty-eight small pearls."

Somewhat later, the Treasury in the Tower assumed its name of the Jewel-house, and the articles composing the Regalia have continued in the custody of the Keeper of the Jewels: a description of them, as they existed in the reign of Henry VIII., will be found in Cromwell's Inventory. In this document the description of the Crown, which, as is well known, was sold by order of Parliament, is very minute; and particularly interesting from the fact, that no drawing has been preserved of this antient ornament of royalty.

Vol. ii. p. 259, 262.

p. 116, 123.

Other portions of the Regalia are enumerated: thus, 16 January, 2Hen. VI., the Treasury received a case containing the Ampulla of consecrated oil, with which the King is anointed on the day of his coronation, two pair of bracelets, and a sceptre. And on the last day of February, 5 Hen. VI., the Ampulla and the "Rod "of Aaron," as the sceptre appears to have been designated, were taken out of their cases by the Duke of Bedford, in the presence of the Lords of the Council assembled in the Star Chamber, and placed in a coffer of leather, bound with iron, secured by three locks, and sealed with the Duke's signet; which coffer itself was placed in a large chest in the Great Treasury at Westminster, also locked with three locks. At the same time the great crown, then lately in the custody of the Bishop of Winchester, and previously deposited in the same coffer, was delivered by the Duke of Bedford and others of the King's Council, to Walter Hungerford the Treasurer and the Chamberlains of the Exchequer.

Some of the Regalia were deposited in the Treasury in the White Tower of London. These articles are enumerated in the inventory taken in 30 Edward III., when William of Wickham, Bishop of Winchester, Treasurer, delivered up his trust to John Bishop of Rochester. Amongst them are found the coronation robes of red velvet, namely, two tunics, a mantle, a stole, a cope, the buskins, and two rochettes of white silk; the spurs are also mentioned as part of the royal ornaments; and furthermore three sceptres of gold, two surmounted by crosses and the third by a bird, and two gilt sceptres likewise surmounted by birds. The inventory also describes the three swords of state, one of them being the well known Curtana; and it is possible that this weapon, to which a mysterious signification appears to have been attached, was in some measure connected with the antient weapons which at much earlier periods were guarded in the Treasury. Amongst the Regalia, must be included the golden rose presented to Edward I. by the Supreme Pontiff.

(See p. cxxii.)

Vol. i. p. 156.

The valuables thus deposited, were repeatedly put in pledge for supplying the necessities of the Sovereign. To the earliest memorandum of the deposit of the crown, is appended a note of its having been pawned to Tidman de Lymbergh, a great loan-contractor or money dealer in those days; and on other occasions it was lent out and brought back again, pledged and re-pledged, as need required. The jewels must have been of considerable value. In the 10th of Richard II. the Royal Crown —without doubt the "Magna Corona" —was pawned to the Mayor and Commonalty of London for the sum of £4,000; and it is to be presumed that the loyalty of these careful citizens would not induce them to advance much beyond two thirds of the estimated value of the article. The other jewels and articles of value were dealt with in the same manner, and pawned over and over again. Many pawns were made for the purpose of securing payment to those who had served in the wars; and the sword of Edward the Black Prince, ornamented or garnished with ostrich feathers of gold, no longer wielded in battle, became serviceable to the state in the way of raising the supplies, being, together with other articles, pledged to Sir Thomas Hawley for the sum of £12 8*s.* 0½*d.*, a debt which had accrued to him in the King's service. After the death of Sir Thomas, his executor, John Bayouse, the money not having been yet paid, accepted £10 in satisfaction of the debt, foregoing the balance of £2 8*s.* 0½*d.* to the King; a reduction which, however, was not effected without the special mediation of the Treasurer.

CURIOSITIES AND JEWELS.

Curiosities and Jewels.

XXXVII. In the Treasury were deposited articles which might be more or less considered as objects deriving their value from their historical interest and singularity, in addition to any intrinsic worth which they might possess. In the ecclesiastical treasuries were many objects of this class, and hence it has been well observed that they were the museums of the middle ages. In England we may trace this practice at an early age; for the sword with which King Athelstane cut through the rock at Dunbar is stated thus to have been deposited in the Treasury. Such weapons connected real life with the fictions of chivalry. The sword of Smith Welland, so famed in the Scandinavian sagas, brought forth for the knighthood of Henry Plantagenet, had been preserved of old in the royal Treasury of England, where it was deposited with the regalia; a companion for the sword of Tristan, presented, or more probably restored, to King John by the Emperor; and which, I rather suspect, is to be identified with the pointless Curtana. Here also was the dagger with which King Edward was wounded at Acre, described as being "saunz pris." And on the 18th May, 36 Ed. III., the Council delivered to the Treasurer and Chamberlains a small forcer bound with iron, containing certain memoranda relating to Dionisius de Morbeke, together with a gauntlet of iron, worn by John King of France when he was taken prisoner.

Curiosities and Jewels. Vol. i. p. 197.

A cross of gold which had belonged to St. Louis, may perhaps be viewed either as a relic or as a rarity. It was set with one great balaice or ruby and eight smaller balaices, eight sapphires, and twelve emeralds, whereof one was broken; the whole weighing forty-five ounces and one quarter. A box of the wood of the balm tree, containing within it three leaves of precious balm, is unpriced. A ring of gold, with a great sapphire, is estimated at forty shillings; but if it be of virtue — magical virtue — it then is "without price." Such charmed gems were not very uncommon. It was one of the articles of the impeachment against Hubert de Burgh, that whereas the King having had in his Treasury a gem which rendered the wearer invincible in battle, he, the fallen minister, furtively removed the same, and bestowed it upon Lewellyn of money in the King's name. On the 12th of March, 22 Ed. II., the Barons of the Exchequer delivered into the Treasury ten bills forged under the seal of William de Northwell, Treasurer of the King's Household; and, shortly afterwards a writ was issued, directing the Treasurer and Chamberlains to transmit them into the Court of King's Bench upon the trial of Walterus de Jernemuth, accused or suspected of having forged the same. A false matrix, cut in lead, counterfeiting the Great Seal of Edward I., was deposited in the iron-bound box, painted green, together with the several authentic seals. In the time when John de Chesterfield was clerk of the Treasury, a bag containing old sterlings clipped, to the amount of six pounds and twenty-one pence, was delivered to the Treasurer and Chamberlains by Richard de Grimesby, and afterwards, viz. on the 31st of August, 38 Ed. III., the bag was placed in a chest under three locks in the Chamber of the Tellers; and the appropriate "sign" of a pair of shears was drawn upon the bill or label fastened to the bag. An antient leathern bag filled with forged pennies of very base metal still remains here as its counterpart.

This building is a vaulted chamber supported by a single pillar; and it must remain with the architectural antiquary to decide why a structure in the early Romanesque style, ranging with the massy semicircular arch in the south transept, acknowledged to be a portion of the structure raised by the Confessor, may not also have been erected in the reign of the last legitimate Anglo-Saxon King. In this Treasury the Regalia and Crown Jewels were deposited, as well as the Records. The antient double oak doors, strongly grated and barred with iron, and locked with three keys, yet remain; but these safeguards were not sufficient to defend its contents. And the indictments which state the manner in which the Treasury was broken open by the assent and connivance of Adam de Warefield the Sacristan and other monks, the accomplices of the porter of the adjoining palace, are singularly illustrative of the jurisprudence as well as of the manners of the times.

In the reign of Elizabeth this Treasury was more particularly appropriated to leagues and treaties. The chamber yet retains the fittings intended for the reception of these documents; and upon several of the drawers or "tills," as they are termed in the old inventories, are yet affixed labels in the handwriting of Arthur Agarde. But the vault is very damp, and for this reason the records seem to have been removed, though not until some of them had sustained irreparable injury.

Buildings.

In the reign of Edward III. we find frequent notice of another Treasury, in the Great Tower within the Tower of London, and to this was annexed an interior Chamber next the "Black Hall," which seems to be the same as the "Treasury under "the Great Hall in the Tower of Lon- "don." These Treasuries were principally used as places of deposit for jewels and articles of value. They are now succeeded by the Jewel-house in the Tower.

A third Treasury was "adjoining to the "Court of the Receipt of the Exchequer," commonly called the Tally Court, in the Old Palace of Westminster. In Agarde's time, this repository contained Domesday, the Papal Bulls, and a considerable number of rolls of antient assize and plea rolls; to which mass, various additions were made from time to time.

A fourth Treasury was "situated over "the gateway going out of the New Palace " into St. Margaret's Lane." This repository in Agarde's time, appears to have been filled with presses containing a considerable number of the more select and valuable records.

The fifth and last Treasury is the only one now subsisting, viz. the antient Chapter House of the Abbey of Westminster. At what period or in what manner the Crown acquired possession of this building has not been exactly ascertained. In the reign of James I. it contained only the fines and the rolls of the King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Justices in Eyre; but at different periods all the records from the other Treasuries have been removed into it. In the Report of the House of Commons it is stated that the records are conveniently arranged in presses made for their reception. The return adds, " That the roof of " the building is apprehended to be in " great danger of falling; one of the but- " tresses by which it was supported having " been removed." It appears, however, to have continued in the same state in 1741, when, as appears by a memorandum annexed to a report made by the surveyors of the Board of Works, the antient groined roof was taken down, to the certain detriment of the beauty of the building, and without having added to its security. Particulars of the further repairs or alterations would possess but little interest. In its present state, the structure is ill adapted to the purposes for which it is employed; it is neither convenient nor secure; and, could it be restored to its original condition,—a restoration which might be effected without difficulty,—it would resume the appearance of the finest apartment of its kind in the kingdom.

The publication of this work was recommended by the Committee of the Commissioners on the Public Records, who examined this repository, for the purpose of enabling the Board to report to the Lords of His Majesty's Treasury thereon; pursuant to the Treasury Minute of the 18th April 1834, by which their Lordships were pleased to appoint me to the Office of Keeper of the Records.

An excellent dissertation upon the formation of the " Tresor " des Chartes " may be found in that great storehouse of historical information, — the Transactions of the Academie des Inscriptions et Belles Lettres, tome xxx.

Note IV. p. xxvii.

The Records in the Office of the Custos Brevium, were, so lately as 1732, arranged under the five pictorial divisions of the Heart, the Ladder, the Crow, the Buckle, and the Bell (Report on Cottonian Library, B. iv.), all distinguished by the signs engraved in the Report of the House of Commons, and which might be mistaken for Egyptian hieroglyphics. Assuming that the ladder stands for Scales, I suspect that in this case the signs were the rebusses of the names of the office clerks where the arrangement was made.

Note V. p. xxxii.

Upon an application made by the State Paper Commissioners in the time of my predecessor the late Mr. Caley, the Wolsey, Cromwell, and Lisle Correspondences, together with other letters, were ordered to be removed, for the convenience of the State Paper Commission, as I presume, to the State Paper Office; but they are considered only as a temporary deposit, and as being still in the legal custody of the Keeper of the Records in the Treasury of the Exchequer.

Note VI. p. xxxiv.

(See also plates III. & IV.)

The letters being folded or plied, they were either tied round with a band of paper or parchment; or the band was passed through the letter and secured by the waxen seal. The wax was not sufficiently adhesive to confine the contents without this precaution. In the fourteenth century, the wax was left uncovered; in the fifteenth, it became the practice to cover the seal with paper; this paper protects the seal, but of course it greatly diminishes the sharpness of the impression. When the seal was not covered by paper, other devices were adopted to preserve the fragile wax; a rush ring surrounding the impression was not unfrequently used. Sometimes neat bands of platted paper were employed for this purpose. Leaves of trees, —the beech, the bay, and the oak, were also placed over the seals to keep them from injury. Pendent seals, whether the King's Great Seal, or the seals of prelates or religious houses, were generally put in bags. These, as well as the strings by which the seals were appended, furnish many exceedingly curious specimens of antient manufactures, and such as, I believe, cannot be found elsewhere. In the reign of Henry II. linen cloth or knitted worsted are occasionally the materials, but more generally thick silk, with rich and varied patterns in colours and in gold; the gold thread is still very bright. Early in the reign of Edward I. we find one example of a bag of linen cloth painted in oil colours. There is full historical evidence that the art or rather, trade of oil painting was known and practised in England at this period, but I do not know that any other specimen is preserved. In this instance, the bag is painted on either side with the leopard of England; the or is nearly rubbed off, but the gules of the field is yet tolerably bright. Tin boxes, such as are now used, are first found in the reign of Henry VIII., and then only for the seals of ecclesiastical documents. I suppose the practice was introduced from Germany.

The strings by which the seals are suspended, are sometimes flat ribbands, but more usually braids of silk, of different gay colours; the green and the yellow are yet very bright, the red is usually faded.

The composition of the wax or mastick changed at different periods. From Henry I. to the early part of Edward I. a species of pale red mastick was generally used; often covered with a coat of resinous varnish. The seal is sometimes crossed with linen threads: and, when they remain, they are saturated with the varnish. I suppose that these threads were intended as further guards for the seal. Green wax was introduced in the reign of Henry III., and gradually superseded the pale red wax, and yellow wax subsequently superseded the green wax, which became appropriated to the King's Courts; but this yellow wax differed materially from the wax now employed for the Great Seal. Either from the want of proper consistency in the modern material, or want of due care in applying the seals, it rarely, if ever, happens that a good impression is obtained, whilst the antient impressions are beautifully sharp and clear.

Note VIII. p. lxxxii.

Upon the subject of the Welsh verse, I have been favoured with the following communication, made by Aneurin Owen, Esquire, to the Right Honourable C. W. Williams Wynn.

" I have endeavoured to ascertain the signification of the line " of Welsh verse which you sent to me; but an obscurity, " apparently in the third word, which I apprehend is owing to " the scribe not being acquainted with the language he was " copying, has prevented me from furnishing other than a " conjectural explanation.

" It appears, from the orthography, to have been transcribed " from some poetry, probably of the twelfth or thirteenth " century, but not from any production which has been printed " in the Welsh Archæology. An usual metre of those periods " was an eight syllable line, with some degree of 'cynghanedd' " (or concatenation of similar sounds), which in later ages was " carried to a great degree of intricacy. I conceive that the " verse in question contains eight syllables. The first two words " are perfectly intelligible, and the last admits of but two " readings —dinas and divas. The first part of the third word,

" as written, is to be read dwyr, and there is but one radix in " the language containing those letters, signifying rising; the " next three upright parallel strokes may be in: thus forming " altogether dwyrinyd; an anomalous word, and unlikely to be " the intended one. The whole will thus stand in modern " orthography:

" Edmygav Ddovydd dwyrinydd dinas
" I will honour the Deity the upholder of the city."

Note IX. p. c.

The statute 35 Hen. VIII. Cap. 1., concerning the establishment of the King's Majesty's succession to the imperial crown of the realm, declares that the King's Highness shall have full power to appoint, declare, and limit, by his letters patent under the great seal, " or else by His Highness's last will and testament " made in writing, and signed with his most gracious hand," the crown of the realm to remain, succeed, and come after his decease, for " lack of lawful heirs of either of the bodies of " the King's Highness and Prince Edward begotten, and also " for lack of lawful heirs of the said Lady Mary and Lady " Elizabeth to be procreated and begotten, as before is limited " in this act, to such person or persons in remainder or rever- " sion as shall please His Highness." And in pursuance of this power, the King, by his will, declares, that upon failure of issue of Edward VI., of Mary, and of Elizabeth, the crown should remain to the heirs of the body of his nieces the Lady Frances and the Lady Eleanor, the daughters of his sister the Queen of France by Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk.

The objection that the will was not executed in conformity to the power, or rather that it was wholly supposititious, was taken in the most positive manner by Maitland of Leithingtoun in his letter to Cecil, dated 14th January 1566, just twenty years after the date of the contested instrument. — " And to " disprove that the will was signed with his own hand, you " know that long before his death he never used his own " signing with his own hand; and in the time of his sick- " ness, being divers times pressed to put his hand to the will

" written, he refused to do it; and it seemed God would " not suffer him to proceed in an act so injurious and pre- " judicial to the right heir of the Crown, being his niece. " Then his death approaching, some, as well known to you " as to me, caused William Clarke, sometimes servant to " Thomas Henneage, to sign the supposed will with a stamp,' " (for otherwise signed it was never,) and yet, notwithstanding, " some respecting more the satisfaction of their ambition, and " others their private commodity, than just and upright dealing, " procured divers honest gentlemen, attending in divers several " rooms about the King's person to testifie with their hand- " writings the contents of the said pretended will, surmised to " be signed with the King's own hand. To prove this dissembled " and forged signed testament, I do refer you to such trials as be " yet left; first, the attestation of the late Lord Paget, pub- " lished in the Parliament in Queen Mary's time, for the " restitution of the Duke of Norfolk; next, I pray you, on my " Sovereign's behalf, that the depositions may be taken in this " matter of the Marquess of Winchester, Lord Treasurer of " England, the Marquess of Northampton, the Earl of Pembroke, " Sir William Petre, then one of King Henry's secretaries, Sir " Henry Nevill, Sir Maurice Barkley, Doctor Buts, Edmond " Harman, Baker, John Osborn, Groom of the Chamber, Sir " Henry Dennis, if he be living, Terris the chirurgeon, and " such as have heard David Vincent and others speak in this " case; and that their attestations may be enrolled in the " Chancery and in the Arches, in perpetuam rei memoriam. " Thirdly, I do refer you to the original will, surmised to be " signed with the King's own hand, that thereby it may most " clearly and evidently appear, by some differences, how the " same was not signed with the King's hand, but stamped as " aforesaid. And albeit it is used both as an argument and " calumniation against my sovereign to some, that the said " original hath been embezzled in Queen Mary's time, I trust " God will and hath reserved the same to be an instrument to " relieve the truth, and to confound false surmises, that thereby " the right may take place." Burnet, Collection II., 30.

Burnet implicitly adopts the statement of Maitland in his marginal note: "The King's sickness — his last will a forgery." But with most ingenious disingenuousness he so manages his text, as to avoid any direct assertion of the fact, which the note on the side of his page leads the reader to adopt without hesitation; for, after extracting a portion of Maitland's letter, he proceeds: "Thus it appears what vulgar errors pass upon "the world; and though for seventy-five years the Scottish "race has enjoyed the Crown of England, and after so long "a possession it is very superfluous to clear a title which "is universally acknowledged, yet the reader will not be ill "pleased to see how ill-grounded that pretence was which some "managed very seditiously during the reign of Elizabeth, for "excluding that line. But if this will was not signed by the "King, other grants were certainly made by him on his death-"bed." Burnet, Hist. II., 349. Never did if better discharge the duty of a peace-maker than upon this occasion; and it will be observed with what extreme dexterity Burnet throws the whole responsibility of the accusation upon Maitland, discharging himself from any examination of the credibility of the evidence. The Treasury of Records was open to him, where an inspection of the will would have convinced him, in opposition to Maitland, that it was signed with the pen. And we must also suppose that the first edition of Fox's Martyrs never fell in Burnet's way, for in this book the fullest proofs would have been afforded to the historian of the Reformation, of the authenticity of the signature. The reader who wishes for information on this very interesting question may consult Harben's Hereditary Right of the Crown of England asserted, p. 186–207, in which it is fully and ably discussed.

The description of Raphael's tapestry has been communicated to the Rev. William Gunn, who, it is to be hoped, may be induced to publish the document, as a supplement to his excellent treatise upon the cartoons, a work which ought to be in the hands of every lover of the fine arts.

Note XI. p. CXV.

Upon the subject of the antient dies, I have received the following interesting communication from John Field, Esquire, of His Majesty's Mint, under whose inspection they have been cleaned and arranged in a proper cabinet.

" The lower die, upon which was engraved the obverse im" pression of the coin, was called the standard, having a four" square spike or tang, which spike was firmly fixed in a solid
" hard block of wood; upon this die was laid the piece of metal
" to receive the impression. It may be here proper to state, " that the metal was not unlikely in the form of a plate or long
" strip, of a much larger size than the coin was to be when " finished; and after receiving the blow was then cut off the " plate to the size and weight required, by the assistance of " shears. This conjecture arises from the difficulty I imagine " the coiner must experience in keeping a piece of metal of
" the exact size of the coin required in the exact position " between the dies while being struck.

" The other die was called a trussell or puncheon, and was " used as the upper die by being held over the standard, firmly
" clipped between a twisted hazel stick in the hand of the " coiner, a second person striking the puncheon or upper die
" with a sledge hammer; a similar practice being still in use
" by the blacksmith to hold his small punches, &c. in the " forging of iron. The hazel stick he calls a sett rod. It will " be seen by examining these dies that the greater portion of " the labour was upon the upper die, from the spread of the " metal on the top; and several of them being split from the " force of the blow required to bring up the impression, the " standard or under die does not appear to be so much dis- " tressed. The number of standards or under dies appears to " be about the usual quantity delivered to the different mints at " that period, viz. about two trussells to one standard, thereby
" showing that the upper die was much sooner worn out or " destroyed, and which accounts for the greater number of " them being found. The total number of dies is 188; viz.
" 124 trussels and 64 standards."
